Oil Stocks Ebb

By Ben W. Gilbert

The East Coast is now "over a barrel" as far as its oil supplies are concerned because military demands to fight the African campaign have reached "simply fantastic proportions," informed Government sources said yesterday.

As a result, decisions must be made shortly on whether military demands, health requirements, or war production needs, or all of them down the line should be cut to make up the present acute supply deficit.

Responsible Government officials believe that the reduction of the basic "A" gasoline ration from 4 gallons to 3 gallons along with a tightening up of enforcement of regulations is all the cut that can be made from passenger car driving.

Other Possible Cuts

Other sources where cuts may be made include oil for home heating, oil for space heating of commercial establishments, oil to heat places of amusement such as theaters and bowling alleys, oil for schools, oil to keep steel blast furnaces going, gasoline for dry cleaning, etc.

Commercial driving may be further curtailed, however, by a reduction in mileage allowance to eliminate some less essential types of commercial driving. The office of Defense Transportation is understood to be working on a plan to revise its mileage regulations for commercial drivers.

Meanwhile, Secretary of Interior Harold I. Ickes (who is also petroleum coordinator for war) told a House Interstate Commerce subcommittee that he had asked the War Production Board for authority to construct a second pipeline line from southwestern oil fields to the Philadelphia-New York area to alleviate the shortage.

One Chief Needed

He stated that his proposed pipeline would take nine months to a year to build and would carry 200,000 barrels of oil a day. It would supplement a 300,000 barrel a day line which will be completed as far as Norris City, Ill., in mid-

Man Jailed on Girl's Charge

Philadelphia, Nov. 24 (AP)—Jon Gamasky, 29, of Reading, Pa., was committed to Moyamensing Prison in default of $2500 bail tonight, after a preliminary hearing on an indictment returned at Washington, D. C., charging that he kidnapped Miss Peggy Anne Kelly, 21, and forced her to marry him.

Gamasky will have another hearing tomorrow morning before United States Commissioner Norman J. Griffin. He was arrested at Reading today.

Must Advertise Gas Ration Book Loss

The District of Columbia Gasoline Rationing Board has ruled that before a lost gasoline ration book can be replaced it must be advertised for on three successive days. Such an ad in the "Lost" classification of The Washington Post costs only $1.20 for all three days for a two-line ad, $1.80 for a three-line ad. The Post accepts "Lost" ads as late as 11 P. M. for appearance in the following morning's paper. Phone NATIONAL 4200 as soon as you discover your loss.

Retailers Authorized to Scrap Frills and Unessential Services

The Office of Price Administration yesterday authorized the country's retailers to adopt "wartime management policies," which would allow them to fight for survival and at the same time save material and manpower for more essential purposes.

The OPA suggestions were part of the Retailers' Economy for Victory Plan which permits dealers to eliminate certain service frills and other nonessential practices without decreasing prices.

The program is expected to be particularly applicable to Washington, where wartime overcrowding has placed a heavy burden on retail establishments.

Among the wartime economies suggested were self-service wherever possible, standardization of sizes, and informative labeling.

Pooling of delivery services and buying facilities was also advocated, along with an effort to avoid buying peaks during the week by adjusting store hours to war conditions and by persuading local industries to stagger payrolls.

Avoidance of buying peaks would enable the making of a reduction in the number of part-time workers employed, OPA said.

Price Administrator Leon Henderson called attention to the need to eliminate "excess baggage" from wartime retailing, and authorized retailers to discontinue the following services:

Deliveries of reasonably carryable packages, except such emergency purchases as prescriptions and sick room supplies.

Sales on approval.

Acceptance of articles returned by customers. (This does not extend to articles not delivered as represented or ordered.)

Gift wrapping and gift packing.

Lay-away and will-call privileges.

Free telephone calls.

Services performed without relation to a specific sale. Examples:

Instruction classes, style shows, store decorations, free concerts, free refreshments and air-conditioning.

The order also states specifically what the retailer cannot do without a compensating reduction in ceiling price. Included in the "can-not" list are the elimination of alteration or remodeling services, repair, maintenance or installation services customarily sold with an article by way of guarantee. Similarly, it provides that if delivery of noncarryable packages is eliminated, the ceiling price must be reduced by the amount of net cost to the consumer of having delivery made by the most usual and reasonable method of transportation.

A retailer who charged extra for delivery may drop delivery, if he drops the charge.

Twenty-four additional policemen were ordered to traffic posts in the downtown area yesterday, the first step in a three-point program to reduce traffic fatalities.

Simultaneously with the augmentation of the increased force in the congested area, Major Edward J. Kelly, superintendent of police, promised that 28 more men will be available for traffic duty by December 1.

Two Inquests Held

In the meantime, two traffic inquests were held at the District Morgue, probing circumstances surrounding two of last week's record fatality toll of seven deaths in six days.

At the coroner's hearing, an Army private, driver of a service ambulance, was ordered held for prosecution under the Negligent Homicide Act. A streetcar motorist was exonerated at a second inquest.

Pvt. Frank Armentano, 27, of Fort Belvoir, Va., was deemed negligent in the operation of the ambulance which crashed into a truck at Fourteenth and K Streets Northwest, Saturday morning, killing a 47-year-old farmer.

He was held for trial in Municipal Court.

The crash injured fatally Russell A. Phillips, 47, of Broadway, Va., who was riding in a truck operated by his brother, Elden, 37, of Harrisonburg, Va. The jury's verdict exonerated the latter.

It was testified that Armentano was exceeding the speed limit on a trip not considered "an emergency." He was bound for Walter Reed Hospital with an expectant

2 Navy Chums and Bunkmates Discover They Are Brothers

Portsmouth, Va., Nov. 24.—Two young sailors in the United States Navy who became chums and bunkmates after enlisting on the same day in separate cities have discovered they are brothers.

The pair, Charles H. Woods, 19, and Garrett Woods, 17, had not seen each other for 13 years.

Back in 1927 Charles, next to the youngest of a family of eight orphaned children in Barbersville, Ky., was adopted by J. B. West, who moved to Columbus, Ohio, two years later.

Charles lost all contact with his brothers and sisters, including Garrett, the youngest.

On September 24 this year Charles West was sworn in as a Navy recruit in Columbus, Ohio, and on the same day Garrett Woods joined the Navy in Louisville, Ky. Both were sent to the Great Lakes Naval Training Station where on their first day they met and took an instant liking to each other. Both were assigned to the same company and to adjoining bunks.

D. C. Extends War Fund Drive To December 8

Quota Still Short $453,715; Soliciting Rules Relaxed

The Community War Fund drive was extended to December 8 yesterday as officials banished area lines and permitted solicitors to seek donations where and from whom they pleased.

When the deadline for contributions was reached at noon yesterday the fund was still short $453,715 of the $4,341,000 goal.

Headquarters of the drive was moved from the Willard Hotel to 1101 M Street Northwest, with a telephone number of Metropolitan 2284.

The responsiveness of givers is indicated through the fact that hundreds of contributions from unsolicited persons are being received each day through the mails.

It is believed there are many others in the city who would contribute if they were approached by a solicitor.

Federal employment contributions are short of the $2,065,000 quota by $159,108. As a result 150 Government employees who attended the report luncheon volunteered to give their utmost efforts towards attaining the Government agencies' quota.

Oscar L. Chapman is unit chairman. This unit had the largest quota of any in the city. Nearest to completing their quotas have been the business firms and employees who are within 9.9 per cent of their goal.

Rehabilitate Nations, Plan Of Roosevelt

Wants Poor Lands Rebuilt, Will Defend His Aid Policy In Broadcast Soon

By Edward T. Folliard
Post Staff Writer

President Roosevelt yesterday struck back at critics who have been saying that a big-hearted Uncle Sam is planning to "shell out" his riches merely to help less fortunate peoples, and announced that he would soon broadcast a fireside chat to show that the United States would be acting in its own interests to help smaller and poorer Latin American republics.

Mr. Roosevelt made his statement at a press conference in which he described what had taken place the night before at a White House state dinner in honor of President Carlos Arroyo del Rio of Ecuador.

His remarks, however, also served to answer a criticism that has arisen since he appointed former Gov. Herbert H. Lehman of New York as director of foreign relief and rehabilitation.

The Chief Executive said that the Good Neighbor Policy, which has done so much to improve relations between the Americas, had now become a part of this country's national policy, and he predicted that it would be continued regardless of changing political fortunes in Washington and other New World capitals.

Mr. Roosevelt outlined plans whereby, in the future, the United States would seek to raise the living standards of some of the Latin American countries without hurting our own economy.

He said that humanitarian considerations aside, the rehabilitation of these countries would be wise both from the standpoint of this Nation's pocketbook and from the standpoint of its safety in case of future wars.

The President cited what had happened in this country's own "Deep South" to combat the argument that he was now trying to debase our own economy in order to build up others.

Twenty years ago, he said, when he went into the South, the whole economic standard in that area was so low that people couldn't buy anything at the store. A great many people, including some in the South, he said, failed to realize that if the buying power of the South were increased, it would help the people in the manufacturing North, too.

The problem, he said, was simple, but nobody did anything about it until after 1933 (the first New Deal year). Mr. Roosevelt, talking in what he described as historical rather than political terms, said that thereafter the progress of the South went up by leaps and bounds.

He recalled that when he was visiting in Georgia, along about 1924 or 1925, he could hardly find

Yanks Advance Japs Isolated In Solomons Yield Ground

By John G. Norris
Post Staff Writer

Japanese forces on Guadalcanal, now believed isolated by a night-and-day American blockade, have yielded more ground before unrelenting United States attacks, the Navy announced yesterday.

Reporting on action in the Solomons Monday (Guadalcanal date), the Navy said that our troops made "limited advances" west of Henderson Field.

The communique also tersely reported that "Japanese troops were active" in the mountains southwest of the American base. There was no indication whether this was an attempt to flank the United States forces advancing west of the Matanikau River or some other maneuver.

Earlier in the day Secretary of the Navy Frank Knox declared that it was "very unlikely" that the Japanese have been able to get any reinforcement and supplies to their 15,000 to 20,000 troops concentrated on the western end of Guadalcanal.

Before the big sea battle in the Solomons 10 days ago, the Japs were getting in from 800 to 900 men with supplies almost every

Axis Column Routed, Troop Train Strafed; Nazi Forces Racing Ashore, Vichy Claims

By Eddy Gilmore
Associated Press Staff Writer

Moscow (Wednesday), Nov. 25.—The three-month-old Nazi grip on Stalingrad was weakening today as a swiftly advancing Red Army killed 15,000 more Germans yesterday and captured 12,000, including three divisional generals, in a great winter offensive rolling so fast that some Nazi units were cut down from behind in panicky retreat.

Russian official announcements raised the toll of Nazis to 77,000 dead and captured, not counting huge numbers of wounded who apparently are freezing to death on the steppes as did other German units last winter in the rout from Moscow.

(Reuters' Moscow correspondent estimated that 120,000 Germans had been wounded in the last few days. This apparently was based on the usual formula of three wounded for each of the 41,000 Germans reported killed.)

The Red Army's effort to encircle the entire Nazi army stalemated before Stalingrad, estimated at 300,000, clearly was gaining in power. Two communiques told of vast stocks of war equipment falling to the Red Army tide, of at least one enemy airbase being seized so swiftly that scores of German planes were unable to take-off.

Russians Hurl Foe Back Inside Stalingrad

Inside Stalingrad itself the Russians in front assaults also were gaining against Nazi detachments whose rear communications have been slashed by Russian flanking armies sweeping across the Don River far to the west.

The regular midnight communique said 900 Germans were killed and dozens of enemy blockhouses occupied in a slow but steady advance inside Stalingrad, while in the Caucasus Red Army units cut down additional hundreds of Nazis in successful stands in the Nalchik and Tuapse sectors of the deep Caucasus and along the Black Sea, respectively.

This bulletin added some details to the striking Russian successes above and below Stalingrad and inside the Don River bend, as announced in a special communique. One Red unit captured a Nazi airbase so swiftly, it said, that 42 enemy airplanes did not have time

Valtin Taken, Held As Enemy Alien

RICHARD KREBS

Broenstrupp, Nazi Advocate, Captured in Pa.

By Dillard Stokes
Post Staff Writer

H. Victor Broenstrupp, 56-year-old pro-Nazi agitator, was arrested near Pittsburgh yesterday when a woman who heard him described on the radio led Pennsylvania Motor Police and Federal agents to his hideout in a cottage in the woods.

Broenstrupp was a dark and more than four months, during which Federal and other officers have sought his trail from New York to the West Coast. He was the last captured of the 23 persons indicted here in July on two counts of seditious conspiracy. Special Prosecutors William Power Maloney and John T. M. Reddan expect to place the 28 on trial before Justice Jesse C. Adkins in a few weeks.

Powerful Figure

Broenstrupp was a dark and powerful figure in the councils of the subversive groups accused of plotting to aid the enemy by corrupting the loyalty and discipline of the armed forces. Among these groups he used such names as Duke of St. Saba, Colonel Bennett, J. G. Francis and Lieut. Gen. Count Victor Cherup-Spiridovich. His New York headquarters was a resort of pro-Nazi propagandists. Broenstrupp's work, however, was severely practical. He told The Post several months ago that he had undertaken to "coordinate" the policies of the string of papers which were later called "the vermin press," whose editors and proprietors are accused of conspiracy with him.

Counselor of Pelley

Once a lawyer, Broenstrupp was a counselor of William Dudley Pelley, the "chief" of the Silver Shirts, who has been convicted of sedition and also will be on trial here soon for conspiracy. The Pennsylvania officers found notes on Pelley's trial, Silver Shirt documents and the plans for a new Silver Shirt organization in Broenstrupp's hideout. Broenstrupp will be arraigned before United States Commissioner Roger W. Know in Pittsburgh tomorrow. Prosecutor Maloney said he would seek a high bail, "appropriate to a fugitive," and would demand that the man be brought back to Washington at once.

Meanwhile, the District grand jury yesterday continued the sedition investigation recently resumed by order of Assistant Attorney General Wendell Berge, chief of the criminal division.

Roosevelt Gave $500 To Help Fight Fish

Albany, N. Y., Nov. 24 (AP)—President Roosevelt contributed $500 to the Dutchess County Democratic Committee campaign fund used in an unsuccessful attempt to unseat Representative Hamilton Fish (Republican) of New York.

A report in the New York secretary of state's office today lists Treasury Secretary Henry Morgenthau, Jr., also a Dutchess County resident, as another contributor. Dutchess, the President's home county, is one of three comprising Fish's Twenty-sixth Congressional District.

Won't Be Deported Until After War; Arrested in Boston

By the Associated Press
Richard Julius Herman Krebs, whose sensational book on his experiences as an agent of the Russian and German secret police was a best seller, has been taken into custody on a warrant ordering his deportation to Germany.

His apprehension near Bethel, Conn., was announced yesterday by Attorney General Biddle, who approved the deportation order based on alleged violations of the 1917 and 1924 Immigration Acts. Krebs, who wrote "Out of the Night" under the name Jan Valtin, is accused of illegally entering the country after once having been arrested and deported and after committing a crime (perjury) involving moral turpitude.

The author had been at liberty in $5000 bond pending a decision by the immigration board of appeals on his appeal from the deportation proceedings. The board voted unanimously for the deportation order on the ground that Krebs had not been a person of good moral character during the past five years and that he was otherwise deportable.

Native of Germany
Since he cannot be deported to Germany until after the war, it was assumed he would be interned as an enemy alien. Krebs is a native of Darmstadt, Germany, and is 37 years old.

He once declared he was "the Comintern's chief trouble-maker on the waterfront of Europe" and his book described in great detail his work as an agent of the Russian O. G. P. U. and the German Gestapo.

Krebs testified before the immigration appeals board that he led a life of "conspiracy and violence" as a member of the Communist Party in Germany from 1923 to 1937. The Communists, he said, sent him to America as an agent of the Russian secret police to stir up trouble along the waterfront.

He came to the United States in 1926 from Shanghai by way of Canada, he testified, after previously making brief visits to this country in 1921 and 1923-24. Krebs assaulted a Los Angeles storekeeper, pleaded guilty and was sentenced to 10 years in San Quentin Prison. He was paroled after 39 months and deported on December 9, 1929.

Pardoned by Governor
Subsequently, the Justice Department said, he admitted he had committed perjury by intentionally misstating the motives for the assault, thus "concealing the Communist Party's connection with the crime."

Krebs was pardoned by the Governor of California last year. In Germany, he was tried for high treason and sentenced to prison for 13 years. The Germans released him in February 1937 after he signed a pledge that he had become "a devoted son of the great German fatherland."

In his book, Krebs described graphically the tortures he underwent while in the hands of the Gestapo.

He told the immigration appeals board that he broke with the Communists in 1937 but remained with the party in order to get his family out of Germany. He contended he had merely posed as a Nazi agent and actually had betrayed the Gestapo to the OGPU, but the immigration board said that by Krebs' own statements, it appeared the Russian government "regards him as one of the most important spies of the Gestapo."

Olson 'Amazed'

Gov. Culbert R. Olson of California, who pardoned Krebs in 1940 for the Los Angeles crime, expressed amazement today over his arrest for deportation. He commented in Sacramento:

"I pardoned Jan Valtin upon the recommendation of hundreds of leading citizens throughout the

Saboteur's Parents Sentenced for Treason

tion lines in constant danger from saboteurs—mothers who had equal rights to consideration with the prisoners here.

"These defendants by their acts have thus forfeited any right to consideration as mothers."

Tears of women spectators heightened the drama of the proceedings—second instance of the imposition of the death sentence for treason in the United States in 148 years—but the rapid audience seemed stirred more deeply by the eloquence of the 39-year-old judge.

However, he said the women undoubtedly followed the leadership of their husbands, and this impelled him to recognize "a distinction between the husbands' wives' degree of guilt."

He stated that sabotage within our borders was as treasonable as spiking the guns of our soldiers on the battle fronts and denounced those who scheme "to destroy their neighbors and this Nation." He asserted:

"Here then is the most iniquitous offense on the unholy list of crimes, an offense which imperils . . . the structure of our Government, the production of the tools for victory, the lives of our production workers . . . and the very ideals of free humanity."

"It is the court's duty in sentencing these defendants to make sure that the punishment meted out to them will act as a timely and solemn warning to all who would attempt to commit the smallest act of sabotage, as well as those who would treasonably traffic with the enemies of the United States."

"Likewise, the sentence must serve notice upon the enemy that the cunningly devised scheme for the use of American citizens of German birth as pawns in the game of sabotage and espionage in this country is doomed to failure."

Judge Campbell reported the defendants, including members of Congress, educators, ministers and such editors as William Allen White of Emporia, Eugene Lyons of the American Mercury, Dewitt Wallace of Reader's Digest, George Backer of the New York Post, Freda Kirchwey of the Nation magazine, and others who felt he had been doing a great service for this country.

In addition, I checked with the Department of Justice and the FBI and was not advised of any objection to Valtin or his activities. In fact, Miss Dorothy Donnell, director of the citizenship program in the Department of Justice, was one of the sponsors of his pardon application.

"That he should now be arrested as a dangerous enemy alien is amazing."

defendants had a fair trial—"A thing of the past" in the German Reich.

The sabotage plot resulted in the execution of young Haupt and five associates August 8. Two other saboteurs were sent to prison.

In the first of the recent cycle of treason convictions, Max Stephan of Detroit was sentenced August 6 to be hanged for aiding a Nazi flier.

Paul Warnholtz, attorney for the three couples in the Chicago case, filed notice that he would appeal. Judge Campbell's statement said further:

"How different this trial was from the treatment given in Germany to persons accused of similar offenses against the German Reich. Here an able, considerate and patient jury of men and women from every walk of life, representative of the finest ideals of our American commonwealth, was carefully chosen by both sides. This jury heard the evidence and rendered a verdict after listening to lengthy summations and arguments ably presented by counsel. . . .

"In pronouncing sentence upon these six men and women, this court is constrained to give full consideration to the fact that our Nation, and every man, woman and child in it, are engaged in a global death struggle against forces of tyranny and evil unprecedented in the history of mankind. . . .

"Citizens threatened with the torture of their relatives in Germany for failure to assist German agents in this country must be impressed with the personal danger involved in yielding to such temptable coercion."

"A jury of their peers has held these three men and their respective wives guilty, and justice must be done them. Thus also will be done to the thousands of loyal German-Americans whose patriotism and devotion to the United States are beyond question. This court does not for a moment believe the prisoners to be representative in the slightest degree of the mass of our German-born citizens. These citizens should not in any way be subjected to harassment, unfairness or prejudice as a consequence of the acts of the defendants in this case. . . ."

Burger Witness Against 14th Spy Colleague

Brasen, drapper and grinning, the German Spy Burger, who betrayed 13 of his colleagues, bore witness against a fourteenth yesterday—and paused to boast that he was "a soldier of the Reich" and a Nazi Party member since 1923.

The spy—Ernest Peter Burger, 36—was called to testify against the ninth of 11 Americans indicted for treason since the war began. This was Helmut Leiner, 33, a gardener, on trial in New York. He is charged with giving aid and comfort to the spies who came here with Burger by submarine in June. Six of them went to the chair in Washington.

Six confederates of these spies were tried for treason in Chicago, with the brash Burger a Government witness. Three of them were sentenced to death yesterday, the other three receiving long prison terms.

Two weeks ago, Burger appeared against the traitor, Anthony Cramer, in New York Federal Court. Convicted, Cramer is due to be sentenced today.

Awaiting trial for treason in Brooklyn are Herman Faje, 36, and his wife, Hildegard, accused of helping two more of Burger's colleagues.

Army Bestows Medals on Crew Of Wilkie Plane

Decorations were awarded by the Army yesterday to the seven crew members of the Army transport plane which carried Wendell Wilkie on his around-the-world trip.

Major Richard T. Kight of Washington, pilot of the plane, received the oak leaf cluster instead of a second award of the Distinguished Flying Cross, which he held already. Kight was cited for "outstanding initiative, resourcefulness and a high degree of courage" under the trying conditions encountered on the flight from August 26 to October 14.

The air medal was awarded to the following members of the crew: Capt. Alex Klotz, San Francisco; Capt. John C. Wagner, Danville, Pa.; Technical Sgt. Richard J. Barrett, 2415 South Chadwick Street, Philadelphia; Master Sgt. James M. Cooper, 4748 Penn Street, Philadelphia; Sgt. Victory P. Minkhoff, Blenheim, N. J., and Corp. Charles H. Reynolds, Kansas City, Mo.

Germans Claim Secret Gun Used At Stalingrad

New York, Nov. 24 (AP)—In the midst of one of their worst setbacks on the Russian Front, the Germans gave currency tonight to a story that they were using a new "secret weapon" near Stalingrad.

Swing to Darlan Is Move for 'Liberated France,' Says West Africa Leader

Move Means No Occupation, Chief Insists

By International News Service
London, Nov. 24.—Pierre Boisson, Governor General of French West Africa, including Dakar, declared tonight that his decision to place himself under the orders of Admiral Jean Francois Darlan would not entail any foreign military occupation of the strategic territory.

In a broadcast from Dakar, quoted by Reuters News Agency, the governor general asserted:

"French West Africa will remain completely free of all foreign occupation."

Boisson, in a proclamation to French troops, said he would never have placed Dakar under Darlan "if it were incompatible with military honor or with allegiance with Petain, from which nobody has been relieved."

"French West Africa will remain true to the line laid down by the marshal," Boisson declared.

"It has been my constant anxiety," said the Governor General, "to maintain the French sovereignty of territories placed under France's protection. That anxiety led me to the decision, in full accord with the military authorities, to bring French West Africa under the orders of Darlan."

"The road which French West Africa is taking, together with North Africa, is for the liberation of France."

Meanwhile, the Algiers radio said today that French Somaliland, in East Africa, may soon join the Allies. According to the Italian East African Empire, French Somaliland is on the Gulf of Aden at the eastern end of the Red Sea.

The Morocco radio, in a French-language broadcast, issued a general call for mobilization of French reservists, explaining that a general mobilization in North Africa had been delayed until now because "the armistice commission had stripped the country of all modern arms."

The inference was taken to mean that American supplies now could be expected.

The Moroccan radio added: "Admiral Darlan, who is now among us, is the legal envoy of Marshal Petain. Forty million Frenchmen and 1,200,000 prisoners are expecting their liberation. A great soldier, Gen. Henri Honore Giraud, is commanding the glorious French army in North Africa."

"Our motto is: 'Be victorious or die! Long Live Petain, Darlan and France.'"

Pakar Forces Eager To Join Allies, Report

London, Nov. 24 (AP).—The national committee of Fighting France met here today, apparently to discuss the situation arising from yesterday's announcement by Admiral Jean Darlan, former Vichy second in command now cooperating with the Allies, that all French West Africa had placed itself under his command.

Gen. Georges Catroux, former commander of the French Nineteenth Army in Algeria, who arrived yesterday, attended the meeting.

While Allied quarters in Africa continued officially to regard the reported change in allegiance of Dakar and the rest of French West Africa as "purely a French matter," sources familiar with the situation believed the big force of French fighting men there were eager to join the Allies in their battle against the Germans and Italians.

Informed quarters in London said approximately 60,000 French troops and sailors were stationed at Dakar, and described them as "in better conditions" than any other forces in the French empire.

British Find Bengasi Still Largely Intact

By Don Whitehead
Associated Press Staff Writer

With the British in Bengasi, Nov. 21 (Delayed).—Columns of black smoke from bomb-kindled fires still hung over Bengasi today as it rolled into the city with advance units of the British Eighth Army—but this is not another Tobruk, completely shattered.

While the harbor area had received the heaviest battering from the air, a senior naval officer who surveyed the damage said it was not as bad as had been expected for he had thought that the enemy would have enlarged upon bomb damage by wrecking harbor facilities.

American bombers were over the night before last and the fires in the harbor probably were partly due to their raid.

In contrast to Tobruk, a ghostly place without civilian life and echoing only to the clatter of the advancing army, Bengasi, though scarred, still looks like a city. The native population remained, giving it a spark of life.

Smoke poured from a broken-backed oil tanker in the harbor hit in a raid two weeks ago. Also in the harbor was a sunken destroyer that wasn't there when the British pulled out their forces last February. A gasoline dump burned on the quay. Oil smoke poured from a burning rubber dump near the edge of the city.

Along the main streets were wrecked buildings and bomb craters, but Bengasi largely was intact.

Mother of Air Hero Receives His Medal

PRESIDENT BESTOWS NATION'S HIGHEST HONOR—Mrs. Michael E. Fleming of St. Paul, mother of Capt. Richard E. Fleming, Marine flier who gave his life in heroic action in the Battle of Midway, receives his Congressional Medal from President Roosevelt. Lieut. Gen. Thomas Holcomb, commandant of the Marine Corps, witnessed the presentation yesterday at the White House.

President Roosevelt invited Mrs. Michael E. Fleming of St. Paul to the White House yesterday to receive the Congressional Medal of Honor awarded posthumously to her son, Capt. Richard E. Fleming, the first Marine Corps aviator so honored in this war and the fifth in Marine aviation history.

Captain Fleming lost his life in a flaming plane in the Battle of Midway.

The citation for the country's highest decoration, read by the President, said the honor was bestowed for "extraordinary heroism and conspicuous intrepidity above and beyond the call of duty."

It said Fleming's "dauntless perseverance and unyielding devotion to duty were in keeping with the highest traditions of the United States Naval Service."

After chatting with Mrs. Fleming a moment, the Chief Executive read the citation and gave her the medal, saying:

"It is the finest medal in all the world. This is something we all will remember."

The flier's mother swallowed hard and said, "I am very proud."

Mr. Roosevelt recalled that his son "Jimmie," a major in the Marines, was at Midway "for a short time" during the battle. He said that he went over from Pearl Harbor on a bomber to take the place of a major who was killed.

Fleming's two brothers, second Lieut. Ward Fleming of the Army Air Corps and James E. Fleming, a student at St. Thomas College in St. Paul, were present for the ceremony and were introduced to Mr. Roosevelt afterward.

"This is for you boys, too," the Chief Executive said, waving a hand toward the medal.

The 24-year-old Fleming, a native of St. Paul and graduate of

Text of Citation

"For extraordinary heroism and conspicuous intrepidity above and beyond the call of duty as flight officer of a Marine scout-bombing squadron during action against enemy Japanese forces in the Battle of Midway on June 4 and 5, 1942. When his squadron commander was shot down during the initial attack upon an enemy aircraft carrier, Capt. Fleming led the remainder of the division with such fearless determination that he dived his own plane to the perilously low altitude of 400 feet before releasing his bomb."

Although his craft was riddled by 179 hits in the blistering hail of fire that burst upon him from Japanese fighter guns and anti-aircraft batteries, he pulled out with only two minor wounds inflicted upon himself.

"On the night of June 4, when the squadron commander lost his way and became separated from the others, Capt. Fleming brought his own plane in for a safe landing at its base despite hazardous weather conditions and total darkness."

Devotion to Duty

"The following day, after less than four hours' sleep, he led the second division of his squadron in a coordinated glide-bombing and dive-bombing assault upon a Japanese battleship. Undeterred by a faithful approach, glide, during which his ship was struck and set afire, he grimly pressed home his attack to an altitude of 500 feet, released his bomb to score a near miss on the stern of his target, then crashed to the sea in flames."

"His dauntless perseverance and unyielding devotion to duty were in keeping with the highest traditions of the United States Naval Service."

Captain Fleming was the highest ranking cadet officer at St. Thomas Military Academy before going to Minnesota University, where he was a campus leader.

The Navy said it was largely by accident that he became an aviator. One night in December, 1938, a friend at his fraternity house asked him to go to a building where an Army flying board was holding physical examinations for the Air Corps. On the spur of the moment, he took the examination and was one of nine out of 200 applicants who passed.

He finished college before taking flight training and late in 1939 he enlisted with the Marines.

Fleming's father, the late Michael E. Fleming, was vice president of a coal and dock company at Minneapolis.

Roosevelt, Jr., Saw 'Plenty of Action,' Says Torpedoman

Chicago, Nov. 24 (AP).—Dick Rogers, 18-year-old Navy torpedoman who had a ringside seat in the American occupation of North Africa, returned to his home in suburban Skokie yesterday to tell about his experiences.

Rogers was a sky lookout aboard a ship which was part of the first United States task force to reach one section of the North African Coast. He said one of his officers was Lieut. Franklin D. Roosevelt, jr., whom he described as a "mighty fine guy."

"We were in plenty of action," he said.

United States Twelfth Air Force Headquarters, Algeria, Nov. 20.—(Delayed).—(AP).—Lieut. Col. Elliott Roosevelt, the President's son, commanding a technical observation unit, arrived today at Maj. Gen. James H. Doolittle's headquarters to join the United States Air Forces operating in North Africa.

Cowboy's Bride Wins 2d Divorce in 6 Weeks

Reno, Nov. 24 (AP).—Mrs. Jean Bennett Wallace Holton, 22, socially prominent in New York, today was granted her second divorce in less than six weeks.

She divorced Warren Holton, 22, Nevada cowboy whom she married October 21, just four days after she obtained a Reno divorce from Russell A. Wallace of New York. She charged Holton with extreme cruelty.

French Fliers Bring Bomber To Aid Allies

An Allied Air Base in West Africa, Nov. 20 (Delayed), (INS).—A French bomber roared over this Allied airfield today and, before anti-aircraft guns could be brought to bear on the lone "enemy," it came in for a landing.

"We came because we wanted to help America fight Germany," was the simple explanation of 22-year-old radio operator Lucien. He revealed that he and his three comrades had left the French base at Senegal early this morning, after cutting telephone wires and wrecking a radio car, and had flown their American-made medium bomber directly to this field to join the Allies.

(Since this dispatch was filed the entire French West Africa colony, including Senegal, has come over to the Allied side.)

"We had been planning for a long time to join the Americans," Lucien explained, smiling happily. "We've always had a good feeling for America. Nearly every member of the French Flying Forces feels the same way."

He explained that when he was assigned to this morning's dawn patrol yesterday, he and his mates, stocky Copilot Jacques Landry, a mechanic named Jean and Pilot-Lieut. Emile, packed their belongings in the ship's bomb rack.

They took off early this morning. "We flew straight here," said Lucien. "It's a good feeling to be with Americans. We want to help them fight the Germans as soon as we're permitted."

Lucien said the French were overjoyed when they first heard of the American offensive in North Africa.

"French spirits are turning up," he said, "looking forward to the time when France will again be free."

"We have come to help speed the arrival of that time."

Parolee Admits He's 'Too Yellow To Go to War'

Chicago, Nov. 24 (AP).—"I'm too yellow to go to war," said the young man who stood before Judge Joseph B. Hermes in Felony Court yesterday.

The court, apparently surprised, queried: "Are you sincere?"

Theodore Kurgan, 23, a parolee being arraigned on a charge of larceny, replied: "Sure; I wanted to be arrested again."

Judge Hermes immediately imposed sentence of one year in jail. Under the new draft ruling for former convicts, Kurgan was reclassified 1-A and faced early induction.

Lease Lend Deals Hard Blow At British Trade, Hannon Says

By the Associated Press

London, Nov. 24.—Sir Patrick Hannon, sauce manufacturer, member of Parliament and persistent critic of some phases of the lease-lend program, declared today that it "has struck a major blow, at least for the time being, at a wide range of British enterprise."

Earlier in his presidential address to the National Union of Manufacturers, he acknowledged the "immense contribution to the war effort" of lease-lend, but said that a disturbing feature of the new relationship between government and business was "an almost crushing embargo" placed on exports.

He added that "it might have been possible to continue in substantial proportion British exports to our dominions and colonial empire without consultation with United States authorities whether a particular article should or should not be included in the category of permissible exports."

Of the Atlantic Charter, Hannon said "many of us may be forgiven if we view with some anxiety the gravity and complexity of the problems which will arise with our dominions and overseas empire when the charter must be examined in the light of its effect upon British competitive power and in consequence upon the means of livelihood of vast masses of our fellow countrymen and women."

Dominion Secretary Clement R. Attlee told Commons today that Britain's postwar policy on raw materials and markets would be governed by the Atlantic Charter and the mutual aid agreement of last February 23 with the United States.

William Craven-Ellis, Conservative, whose question brought Attlee's answer, commented that "your reply should be communicated to Mr. Wendell Wilkie, who was very critical of the statement made recently by the Prime Minister."

Rommel Rushing on El Agheila to Make Desperate Stand Against British Pursuers

By Frank L. Martin
Associated Press Staff Writer

Cairo, Nov. 24.—The British Eighth Army hounded the remnants of the fleeing Axis desert army beyond the native Libyan village of Agedabia today and poised another punch to throw at El Agheila's defenses, where the Germans were believed gathering all their available strength to stop the drive for Tripoli.

(In London British military sources expressed the belief that there would be a three or four-day lull in the desert, pointing out that Gen. Sir Bernard Montgomery is not likely to make any half-prepared lunge at the Germans. Some time is required to bring up guns and supplies sufficient for a knock-out at El Agheila, these sources said.)

From El Agheila onward there is a vast desert waste up to Misurata, an oasis 11 miles long and 3½ wide with a population of about 5,000.

It is defended by a permanent garrison and has a good airport and fair harbor. A big salt marsh to the east forms a natural defense position and to the west stretch miles of coastal dunes. But from a defense point of view Misurata is gone too advantageous because the flank could be turned readily.

The pursuit caught up with Marshal Erwin Rommel's rear guard west of Agedabia after the British entry into the native village yesterday, and today the head of the retreating enemy column was reported approaching El Agheila, 70 miles to the west.

Enemy troops were found to have abandoned the Gialo water-hole, 200 miles south of Bengasi, and the oasis was taken over by the British without opposition.

Roosevelt Hits Good Neighbor Policy Critics

a rural store that was solvent. The reason was, he said, that the stores didn't have any turnover to speak of; a man might go in to buy a hat, and be handed one that had been in stock for eight years.

Once the buying power of the South had been increased, the President said, the North found a wider market for its products, and he cited radio sets as an example.

"Shell Out" Confirmed
The same thing, the President said, can be done in Latin America, where by helping some of the smaller and poorer republics we would help ourselves, too. Yet, he said, a lot of people can't see that.

Since his appointment of former Governor Lehman as director of foreign relief and rehabilitation, the President said, a lot of people have been saying, is the United States going to "shell out" merely to help other people?

"Well," a reporter asked, "are we going to shell out?"
Sure, the President said, we are going to rehabilitate them. This was going to be done, he said, not merely from a humanitarian standpoint alone, but from the point of view of our own pocketbooks and our own safety in case of future attacks.

He said then he was going to talk over the radio on this subject soon because he wanted to reach a different audience.

Discussing the state dinner for President Arroyo del Rio, Mr. Roosevelt said that irrespective of party or politics, people are beginning to believe that if we continue the Good Neighbor policy as a continental policy it is going to work.

He recalled two crises that arose from the crowds when he made his good will visit to Montevideo and Buenos Aires in 1936. These were "Viva Roosevelt!" and "Viva Democracy!"

He was impressed, he said, by the fact that most of the people cried "Viva Democracy!" He concluded that they felt they had something worth living for and fighting for.

The recollection of this led Mr. Roosevelt to say that the Good Neighbor policy was a part of this country's national policy, and that it would be continued regardless of the political complexion here or south of the Rio Grande.

Ecuador Is Loyal, Arroyo Tells House

By the Associated Press

President Carlos Arroyo del Rio of Ecuador, whose country is cooperating in the defense of the Panama Canal, told the House yesterday that Ecuador was "loyal, fraternal and strong" in its links with the United States.

The Ecuadorian chief of state, in the United States as the guest of President Roosevelt, emphasized in his brief extemporaneous talk that it was necessary now to never before that there be unity of thought and effort in the Americas.

Speaker Sam Rayburn said that it was his "great pleasure, high privilege and distinguished honor" to present President Arroyo—"the President of a great and free people"—to the House.

Immediately after his speech Arroyo met the members of the House individually.

Secretary of State Cordell Hull presided at a special session and luncheon of the Pan American Union in honor of President Arroyo and welcomed the visiting chief of state in the name of the diplomatic representatives of the American republics.

Pope Elevates Boylan and Bins To Bishops

Appointment by Pope Pius XII of two new bishops in the United States was announced yesterday by the Apostolic Delegate.

The Right Reverend Monsignor John J. Boylan, Ph. D., Vicar General of the Diocese of Des Moines, was named to be Bishop of Rockford, Ill., the see made vacant by transfer of the Most Reverend Edward F. Hoban to the diocese of Cleveland.

The Right Reverend Monsignor Leo Bins, now secretary of the apostolic delegation here, was appointed titular Bishop of Plana and coadjutor bishop and apostolic administrator of the diocese of Winona, Minn.

Bishop Hoban will now become coadjutor of the diocese of Cleveland, where he will have right of succession to the Most Reverend Joseph Schrembs, Archbishop of Cleveland.

The Most Reverend Francis M. Kelly is now Bishop of Winona.

Injuries Received In Beating Fatal To Md. Policeman

Edward Robertson, 66, town policeman for North Beach, Md., and a former soldier, died at the Soldier's Home Hospital here last night from injuries received when he was beaten over the head by three Negroes Friday night at Randall's Cliff, Md.

The officer had been called to Whipple's store, where there had been an altercation when the three men beat him, local police were told.

When his condition became steadily worse, he was brought to the hospital here where it was found he had suffered a brain hemorrhage.

Maryland police are now seeking his assailants.

War's Drain Points To New Oil Cuts

December, going into operation in mid-January, he said.

For the present, however, East Coast oil stocks are continuing to drop, informed officials said.

A list of all users of petroleum products has been prepared by the Office of Civilian Supply and Office of Price Administration with a view to going down the line to see how much fuel can be squeezed out of each user. The study is expected to wind up with selective cuts being made where it will hurt the least.

Efforts are being made to avoid cutting oil for home heating, although a 10 per cent cut in fuel oil rations for home heating, reducing basic temperatures to 60 degrees has been suggested in one quarter.

The problem is understood to have dramatically focused the attention of Government officials to the need for centralizing authority over petroleum in the hands of one official. Plans are now being evolved to give one official complete authority to develop a program of allocations for oil comparable to the allocations program now in effect for steel, copper, aluminum, and rubber.

Present indications are that the job will be given to Ickes. High Government officials have stated that failure to adopt an allocations program for oil before the present emergency has left the East Coast in the critical position it is in today.

Enormous withdrawals of oil from the East Coast have occurred for the African campaign because it is nearer to the front than the Gulf Coast. Plans to secure some of the supplies outside of the Atlantic seaboard are now being considered, it is understood, although it is believed that longer hauls would only complicate the problem by diverting additional tanker boats from the Atlantic Coast trade.

Present fuel-oil rations for home heating have been calculated to maintain a temperature of 65 degrees, but studies are under way to see if that amount can be trimmed without endangering health.

However, one official stated that if the military demands continue to increase at their present rate, a crisis in supply could be created which would drastically cut the amount available for home heating, leaving the coast area exposed to possible fuel shortages.

One proposal being considered is a request that schools heated with oil be closed for part of the winter, with school sessions being allowed to extend into the summer months, when no heat will be required.

The list of possible cuts is expected to be submitted to the War Production Board in the near future for action.

Ickes started the ball rolling on the fuel crisis at the start of the African campaign by stating that the East Coast lacked about 139,000 barrels of petroleum products a day. He then transmitted the information to WPB Chief Nelson, who asked Price Administrator Henderson to figure out ways of making the cuts.

Informed officials believe that more than 139,000 barrels a day will have to be saved, if all military demands are to be met.

Banks' Federal Investments Get Approval

By the Associated Press
In an apparent preliminary to the record war financing program for December, four Federal financial offices Monday night let down the bars to facilitate holdings of Government securities both by banks and by nonbanking investors.

In a joint statement, the four agencies which represent the bank examining groups made it clear that banks would not be criticized by them for heavy investments in Government securities, nor for making loans to "individual subscribers relying upon anticipated income for the purchase of such securities."

The four are the Comptroller of the Currency, the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp., the Federal Reserve Board and the executive committee of the National Supervisors of State Banks.

77,000 Nazis Fall in Soviet Offensive

arms and other equipment and provisions which "still are being counted."

In the 25-mile advance northwest of Stalingrad there was a significant subsidiary action mentioned by the Russians. One Red Army column driving straight down the western bank of the Volga captured the villages of Tomlin, Akatovka and Latashanka to link up directly with Red Army troops who for three months have held the northern factory district of Stalingrad.

This preaged an early rout of Nazi forces still entrenched in the ruins of that industrial city, in the opinion of observers. The greater arms of the offensive undoubtedly also will force an imminent decision on Nazi chieftains who had been told by Adolf Hitler to take Stalingrad at all costs.

The northern army of the great "Russian bear trap" had reached the town of Surovikino, apparently beyond the Serafimovich sector, 85 miles northwest of Stalingrad on the Don River.

The central army, after slicing southwest from the Volga to Kalach on the easternmost point of the Don River bend, crossed that river apparently to make a junction with other Red Army units crossing in the Kietskaya region, 75 miles northwest of Stalingrad.

Reds Severing Road Links

With Nazi railroad arteries cut both above and below Stalingrad these central armies now were severing road links that ran straight eastward in the Don River elbow, and crossed that river by Nazi pontoons at a point only 25 miles short of Stalingrad.

It was in the Don River elbow that the Russians said they surrounded and captured the remnants of three Nazi divisions, including their generals and staff members.

A 6-mile advance in the Don loop area yesterday found the Russians occupying the villages of Zimovaya, Kamysinka, Bilzhny, Perekopka, Trekhostrovskaya and Sirotinskaya.

The southern Red Army fanning out along the Stalingrad-Novosibirsk railway reached Sadovoye in a 12-mile advance from Aksai. This village is more than 50 miles below besieged Stalingrad.

The villages of Umanovo and Peregruyev were taken in this advance. (The London Express quoted a Stockholm dispatch saying the Germans had "begun to pull out from Stalingrad.")

The German escape corridor from Stalingrad to the west grew narrower each hour. With the Soviets in Kalach on the eastern bank of the Don at its elbow, the corridor is in serious danger of being cut completely.

Ice-caked roads were crowded with captives. The increasing bag of enemy prisoners, unprecedented in this war, indicated a deterioration of German morale.

other night. They were run in on cruisers and destroyers as a rule.

Knox revealed yesterday, however, that "pretty rigid" American patrols, operating both day and night, now blockade the strategic island and have virtually cut off the enemy units from the rest of their forces in the middle and north Solomons.

He declared, in response to a question, that the "ultimate objective" of our troops is to drive the Japs completely off the island. Asked if the Nipponese could not continue to filter in reinforcements in small boats from a nearby island, the Navy Secretary answered "possible but not probable."

Knox told reporters that "we are widening out our area of control" on the island by the attacks along the north coast of Guadalcanal west of the air base. He said that the area of coast line now within American lines was about 17 miles long and 4 miles deep at Henderson Field.

An aide pointed out here that this is less than 3 per cent of the area of the island. A large part of the remainder is not held by either side.

Yesterday's communiqué also reported that American planes attacked Japanese positions on the island the night of November 22-23.

Enemy Lines Fought
Our aircraft have been pounding the enemy lines and supply dumps with regular attacks since the great battle off the island November 13-15. No enemy air attacks have been reported on our positions since November 12.

The Japanese activity southwest of Henderson Field was said to be in the Manubulo and upper Matanikau River regions, some three miles from the north coast. While no explanation was given as to what it might portend, some officers speculated that it might be a possible flanking move and others that the Japs were installing artillery here on high ground overlooking our airfield.

Japs' Belated Battle
Report Found Amusing
Pearl Harbor, Nov. 24 (AP)—Navy officials took note with a knowing smile today of Japanese broadcasts that "decisive battle is being fought between the Japanese and American navies in the Southwest Pacific."

Admiral Chester W. Nimitz, commander in chief of the Pacific fleet, assured he had no knowledge of such a battle and said:

"You can draw your own conclusions why the Japanese made the announcement."

Among the conclusions might logically be the fact that had news cannot be kept from the homeland and that the Tokyo broadcasts, made nine days after the Japs suffered their series of naval defeats in the South Pacific, constitute a left-handed admission that a grinding offensive against Japan is under way.

Long-range P-38 Lockheed Lightning fighters engaged in dog fights as far south as the Gulf of Gabes.

The reported new landings would place Axis forces across the coastal road leading from Tunis to Italian Tripoli, the last potential refuge for Marshal Rommel's desert armies retreating westward across Libya.

The Axis intention apparently was to link its forces at Bizerte and Tunis via the coastal road with the garrisons of Tripoli and with Rommel's forces, too, if they eventually escape the British pursuit from the east.

Sfax lies midway between Tunis and Tripoli near the top of the Gulf of Gabes, and Gabes itself is some 65 miles to the south, where the coastline turns from the north to eastward line leading to Tripoli.

Shuttling over the Sicilian channel area, Allied airmen blasted the Axis' African port of entry at Bizerte, strafed the Italian air base at Palermo, downed three planes off the north African shore and, according to Radio Algiers, destroyed nine planes on a Tunisian field.

Much of the Allied air strength springs from Malta, rocky island 63 miles south of Sicily—the same hornet's nest which has destroyed more than 1000 enemy planes in this war.

Axis air fleets drawn from all parts of Europe were reported by the Morocco radio to have given raiders four alerts last night and Algeria Tebessa on the Tunisian-Algerian border. Vichy also reported Bone and Bougie, forward Allied landing ports, were "heavily bombed."

New Spitfires in Battle

The newest of the Spitfires which won air dominance over the European coast knifed through the Axis attackers and downed a third of one flight attacking French ground forces. Twin-engined United States fighters soared into the fray to protect Flying Fortresses battering Axis ports.

Both sides still were building up their resources on the ground while in Libya the British Eighth Army pushed past Agedabia toward El Agheila and also forced the enemy to withdraw from the Gialo oasis which threatened the British left flank.

Berlin claimed the capture of an important railroad junction, which might be Gialo on the coastal line from Tunis to Gabes and due west of Mahares.

The Germans also claimed the Gafsa oasis from which the French reported yesterday they had repulsed Axis units.

The text of the War Department communiqué, issued in Washington, follows:

"North Africa:
"1. Local engagements are reported by forward troops of the Allied forces. French patrols report continued activity in the southern sector. In the southern sector also an Allied force paratroop unit repulsed an enemy mechanized column and captured prisoners."

"2. Our fighter planes shot down four enemy aircraft and attacked an enemy troop train near Gabes. Bombers have carried out night raids on Bizerte and Tunis. None of our aircraft is missing from these operations."

Men Upset by Colors In Women's Clothes
Detroit, Nov. 24 (US)—A grievance committee tonight faced the problem of deciding just what colors, if any, are distracting to men.

Nine women workers at the Ford Motor Co.'s Highland Park plant, in a grievance filed with the U. A. W.-C. I. O. local, protested being sent home for wearing colored sweaters, collars and blouses with their regulation uniforms.

"They said the colored clothing distracted the men," one of the women declared.

Soldier Denied Clemency
Columbia, S. C., Nov. 24 (AP)—Gov. R. M. Jeffries said today he had denied clemency for Corp. John K. Robinson, 18, of Camp Croft, sentenced to die December 11 in the electric chair for the murder of Kenneth J. Wofford, Spartanburg taxi driver.

Robinson said he was under the influence of intoxicants and that he shot the taxi driver the first time to rob him and then shot him again to end his suffering.

vital shipping space. The step has resulted in providing more space for spare engines, spare parts, and extra ground crews, he said.

Observers believed that the President was in effect telling the scrapping Government officials to compose their differences among themselves. He explained that they should be locked up in a room together until they got things settled.

Meanwhile, it was learned that Secretary of War Stimson and Secretary of Navy Knox have still failed to counteract the directive giving Wilson broad powers over aircraft. It is understood that Nelson, who acted under a broad grant of authority from the President to determine production policy, feels that the military has challenged his authority.

With respect to Wilson, the President stated that he would have charge of all production and would try to work out kinks in the timing of production schedules. As far as final say is concerned, however, all concerned are supposed to reach an agreement, he said.

The President pointed out that disagreements between technical people over the proper course of action, to follow were perfectly understandable, and that reconciliation of new factors was a constant, day-to-day process.

The only test, he declared, was to see if things are coming out as well as reasonably can be hoped. Things are getting on pretty well, he said.

President Cites Doodling
The President answered a question on whether he planned to appoint an official over all the civilian war agencies by stating that people who spend their time drawing up new governmental organizational charts are just doodling.

Doodling—a term used for idle scribbling by persons talking on the telephone—was a good word for it, the President added.

Some observers interpreted this as a criticism of the plan advanced by some congressional sources to create an Office of Total Mobilization to heading all civilian agencies.

Quality Stressed
With respect to the plane program, the President explained that efforts were being made to secure quality production, even at the expense of quantity.

He asked reporters to decide whether it would be better to have 30 $5 gold pieces or 20 $10 gold pieces to make this point. He asked them if it would be preferable to have 10,000 planes of the type made last January or 8000 that are twice as good.

Recalling his trips through the country's war plants, he pointed out that four different ways of putting planes together. Mr. Roosevelt stated that no one in the room was in a position to decide which method was best, but that technical people had the job of working out these differences.

He then declared that all his auditors and himself were children when it comes to solving engineering problems.

Everywhere At Once, That's Gen. Doolittle

By Wes Gallagher
Associated Press Staff Writer
Allied Air Force Headquarters in North Africa, Nov. 24.—That "little man who is everywhere" is the best way to describe the hero of the Tokyo air raid. Maj. Gen. James M. (Jimmy) Doolittle, who is master-minding the American air drive against the Germans in Tunisia with the Twelfth Air Force.

In an operations room at a windswept airport a major voiced his heartfelt frustration.

"I wish the general would stay put long enough for me to talk to him," the major said. "If I turn my back he's off to Oran or Algiers or Casablanca or somewhere else before I can get hold of him."

At that moment a door at one end of the room flung open. A slight figure wearing a floppy flier's cap and a leather jacket with only a silver star on his collar to set him apart from a second lieutenant, strode in. He took a quick glance at the operations boards and went out the other door with the speed of a fox dashing for cover.

The One-Man Gang

"There he goes again," moaned the major. "I've got to catch him. Goodby."

Nervous, energetic Doolittle has been the one-man gang of this air force he created in a month's secret work in London.

He keeps a Flying Fortress at his disposal 24 hours a day, the same one recently shot up by the Germans, and spends as much time in the air as on the ground.

Although his Fortress is used as a passenger plane, he keeps two bombs in the bay "just in case we see something to drop them on."

Doolittle does everything himself, dashing hundreds of miles through the war zone as though taking a taxicab from one headquarters to another.

He flew into the Oran Airdrome minutes after his fighters and ground troops had captured the field, with a battle going on a short distance away.

Pilots Worship Him

The young fighter and bomber pilots who must be part cynics where what they call the "brass hats" are concerned, worship him, and Doolittle shows a decided preference for the company of young army men, wandering about at every opportunity, asking questions, learning the boys by name.

"That's Jimmy all right," said one young pilot with a thick Southern accent. "He comes right down here with us and asks questions and calls me by my first name. We're ready to go any place he wants to lead us any time."

Air-Raid Control At Silver Spring Promotes Holmead

Edward C. Holmead, former District air-raid warden of the Seventh District, was promoted to deputy controller of the Silver Spring air-raid control center at a meeting of the Montgomery County civilian defense executive committee Monday night.

Harry Bair was promoted to the post of district warden.

Judge Albert Brault was authorized to procure certificates for all civilian defense personnel who had completed training.

The committee recommended that identification flags be provided to all firemen to be used in a blackout and permit them to move their cars.

Half of Jews Ordered Slain, Poles Report

By the Associated Press
London, Nov. 24.—The Polish government-in-exile asserted today that Heinrich Himmler, Nazi Gestapo chief, had ordered the extermination of one-half of the Jewish population of Poland by the end of this year and that 250,000 had been killed through September under that program.

"According to information leaking from the German labor office (Arbeitsamt), only 40,000 Jews are to remain in the Warsaw Ghetto—only thoroughly skilled workers to be employed in the German war industry," a government statement said.

Most Convincing Proof

"The most convincing proof of the dwindling numbers in the ghetto lies in the fact that for September, 1942, 130,000 ration cards were printed; for October, the number issued was only 40,000."

The statement said that those marked for extermination at any time are "driven to a square, where old people and cripples are segregated, taken to a cemetery and shot."

"The remainder," it said, "are loaded into freight cars, 150 to a car intended for 40. The floor of the car is sprinkled with a thick layer of lime or chlorine-sprinkled water. The doors of the cars are sealed. Sometimes the train starts immediately. Other times it waits on a siding for days."

"The people are packed so tightly that those who die of suffocation remain in the crowd side by side with those still living. Half of the

Heavy Land, Air Battles Rage as Allies Close In on Japs at Buna, New Guinea

By the Associated Press
Allied Headquarters in Australia (Wednesday), Nov. 25.—Heavy fighting by both land and air raged today throughout the Buna-Gona sector of the northern New Guinea coast where Japanese troops, trapped within a constricting area by Allied forces and the sea, continued to fight bitterly to maintain a precarious hold on the beach.

The Allied high command's noon communique said fighting on the Buna-Gona sector was accompanied by Allied bombing forays on Japanese plane bases on Timor, New Ireland and at Lae, further up the New Guinea coast.

"Heavy fighting by land and sea rages throughout the position," the communique said of the Buna-Gona area.

2 Million Jews Slain, Rabbi Wise Asserts

By the Associated Press
Rabbi Stephen Wise, chairman of the World Jewish Congress, said last night that he had learned through sources confirmed by the State Department that approximately half the estimated four million Jews in Nazi-occupied Europe had been slain in an "extermination campaign."

Dr. Wise, who also is president of the American Jewish Congress and chairman of a committee composed of representatives of leading Jewish organizations in America, said these sources also disclosed that Hitler has ordered the extermination of all Jews in Nazi-ruled Europe in 1942, and that the Jewish population of Warsaw, Poland, already has been reduced from 500,000 to about 100,000 Jews.

Yesterday's communique reported the Allies had entered Gona, 12 miles up the coast from Buna, and were closing in on the Japs' only remaining foothold in the sector.

The command reported heavy air units dropped 1000-pound bombs, the most potent so far reported in use in the New Guinea fighting, on the airstrike runway at Lae, which the enemy could use to send aerial support to its beleaguered troops.

The Japs sent 18 enemy bombers for their first raid in force in some time, on Darwin, Australia, last night but the communique reported "no damage." One bomber was shot down by night interceptors and another by antiaircraft fire.

U. S. Losses Light Despite Jap Tricks

With United States Forces Somewhere in New Guinea, Nov. 23 (Delayed) (AP).—United States troops fighting a jungle battle over what they say must be the world's worst battleground are taking everything the Japanese have in their full bag of tricks with comparatively few casualties.

In short, in this cautious, painstaking advance through tall grass and under the green canopy of tall trees, the Americans are dealing out steady punishment at small cost.

Our troops are finding the Japanese tricky. For instance, one wounded Japanese lying among the dead was caught lifting a hand finished him.

A bullet in the head of Corp. Clinton Brownell of Plattville, Wis., described the Japanese as "big fellows, well-equipped, fighting from well-prepared positions in slit trenches, behind log barricades, and some barbed wire."

The enemy has staged a regular show with sound effects—firecrackers and shouting.

The assault started at dawn November 19. The troops in the unit I was following first had to cross a deep stream. On the other side was a machinegun nest, but the Japanese let the first troops cross before opening fire.

Corp. Delos A. Leland of Alexandria, La., and Pvt. John Wilson of St. Louis stumbled on the machine gun, and Leland was wounded by the first burst.

"The bullet knocked me down, and that was the first I knew the Japs were there," said Leland. "I could hear Wilson crawling towards them, so I opened fire with my rifle. I could hear Wilson firing, too. We got four Japs, but I had to come back to the hospital."

The advance continued in that manner. The troops edged forward cautiously. A burst of machinegun fire would send them flat into the mud. Our machine guns or mortars would seek out the Japanese nest, and when it was silenced the troops moved forward again.

The first objective was Cape Endalade, which juts out into the sea, and a Japanese airstrike about 3 miles south of Buna. Fighting was intense at both places.

MEN OF 18 AND 19 ENLIST TODAY IN THE COAST ARTILLERY!

(HARBOR DEFENSE AND ANTI-AIRCRAFT)

- How would you like to shoot the wing off a Junkers bomber—or watch a Zero come tumbling down in flames under your fire? Thousands of red-blooded young Americans are joining the Army's Coast Artillery Corps for that kind of thrilling action.
- Mobile anti-aircraft batteries of the Coast Artillery not only guard our own country but go to every part of the world where the fighting is toughest. Armed with the deadliest guns, the most modern detecting and range-finding devices, their exciting job is to knock Axis planes out of the sky. Their slogan is "We keep 'em falling!" And - they're equipped to move fast, wherever attack threatens.

- Coast Artillery men operate giant searchlights to hunt down the night raiders. They use automatic weapons, so startling and so effective that they've made Hitler shake in his boots. They handle the big barrage balloons that form a spider web of defense about our vital areas.
- If you are 18 or 19 and want action, here's your chance! Today, while you still have the chance to choose, enlist in the Coast Artillery or one of the other branches of the service open to you. Get full information at the nearest Army Recruiting and Induction Station—now!

THERE'S ALSO PLENTY OF ACTION IN THESE U. S. ARMY BRANCHES:

AIR FORCE—Learn to fly and fight and keep 'em flying in one of more than 26 Air Force jobs. Bombardiers, navigators, pilots, gunners, radio men and mechanics are needed. Train for a career in this fighting service.

ARMORED FORCE—Smash the enemy with a fast-moving, powerful team of tanks, combat cars, trucks. "Jeeps," motorcycles. There's thrilling action for gunners, drivers, radio men and mechanics in the Army's tough armored divisions.

CAVALRY—Whether you like to ride a good horse or handle a fast armored car, motorcycle or truck, there's a place for you in the Cavalry's mobile striking force. The rougher the going the better the Cavalry likes it.

CORPS OF ENGINEERS—In the forefront of the fighting much of the time, you'll see a lot of action with the Engineers. Building bridges, roads, air-fields and tank-traps—planning camouflage—destroying enemy installations—are all in the day's work.

FIELD ARTILLERY—Here's the outfit that softens up the foe with a barrage of shell-fire, unloads his supply lines and his reserves. The guns roll fast behind speedy trucks and tractors. Plenty of action for driving drivers, gunners and mechanics.

INFANTRY—Moving 40 miles an hour in big trucks, skidding by parachute or flying into enemy territory in transport planes, today's infantry is streamlined. Eleven different weapons give deadly fire-power. Upon enlistment you may request assignment for tank-destroyer training.

SIGNAL CORPS—In the nerve center of the Army, Signal Corps men "get the message through." Radio, telephone and other means of communication are their tools. They work with "electronic sentries" and other secret weapons, and get front-line action.

Tree Lighting Up to Army, Secret Service

With the lights out over most of the world, the annual Christmas tree lighting at the White House will be held much the same as in past years—if the approval of the Army and Secret Service is given, it was announced yesterday at the regular meeting of the District Recreation Board.

Desired By President

President Roosevelt expressed his wish last month that the program, which through a community observance assumes national scope in a presidential Christmas message to the Nation, be held again this year in spite of the war. This year will mark the twentieth observance of the tree-lighting custom.

Word of whether the Secret Service, which is responsible for the personal safety of the President, deems the program feasible is expected within a few days, Milo F. Christiansen, recreation superintendent, told the board. A meeting of the various agencies which participate in the observance probably can be called next week, he said.

Little Blackout Conflict

If the program is held at twilight, as has been customary, it should not seriously conflict with public blackout regulations, Christiansen pointed out. Expense this year should be considerably less than last, when permanent electric conduits were laid for the lighting.

Members of the recreation board, which was formed last spring, will be added to the usual executive committee for the program. Loss of recreation employees to higher-paid and better-protected Government positions is becoming "acute," Christiansen told the board in referring to a report made at the meeting that five of the department's workers had resigned recently.

Recreation employees are not yet classified under Civil Service and their pay is still dependent on the department's appropriation. Work on classification sheets, describing each position, is proceeding slowly, Christiansen said, as the department is short-staffed and has little time to spend on the work.

These sheets next have to go to the District Personnel Board for approval, and how soon the classification procedure can be completed is thus far impossible to estimate, Christiansen said.

Playground Work Resumed

Work on eight playground areas, which was stopped by a Federal Works Agency order halting all nonessential work using critical materials or machinery a few weeks ago, has been resumed, Irving C. Root, superintendent of National Capital Parks reported.

Under a special permit to National Capital Parks, this work is now proceeding according to schedule and a green light has been given also for construction of 20 more playgrounds which had not been started and 56 other park projects such as hiking and bridge trails.

Safety Program Indented
The Recreation Board endorsed the proposed Water Safety program of the District Red Cross. Out of about 17 indoor pools in the District, only four provide anything in the way of swimming instruction, according to figures presented to the board by John W. Gates, of the Red Cross.

In respect to coordinating this program with the War Fitness Program, the board will refer Mr. Gates to the War Hospitality Committee. The fitness program now comes under that committee, with which the Recreation Board will cooperate when called upon, it was pointed out.

President Calls for Support of Yule Seal Sale

With a warning that tuberculosis has increased in every other war, President Roosevelt said yesterday that "cooperation of all people in the fight against tuberculosis is imperative this year."

In endorsing the thirty-sixth annual Christmas Seal campaign which opened Monday, the President said it would take the greatest effort possible on the part of the people to hold the disease in check in this country.

"The unholly alliance between war and disease is particularly powerful in the case of tuberculosis," President Roosevelt stated. "The disease is increasing alarmingly in many warring European and Asiatic countries."

"In the United States tuberculosis is now at the lowest rate in our history. But, to hold the disease in check during wartime will demand the greatest effort possible on the part of the people, the medical profession, the tuberculosis associations and the official health departments. Cooperation of all people in the fight against tuberculosis is imperative.

"The tuberculosis associations are well under way in their intensified and expanded wartime campaign. I have full confidence that the American people will generously add the purchase of Christmas Seals, the main support of the National Tuberculosis Association and its 1700 affiliated associations, to their many other wartime activities."

A generous response to the seal campaign in Washington was reported as plans went forward for the operation, beginning December 1, of numerous booths throughout the city where seals will be sold.

Of 100,000 Christmas seal letters mailed to District residents, returns had been received yesterday from about 2000. Price of the seals, as usual, is 1 cent apiece. There's no ceiling price, however, and residents who wish to pay more than the standard price are free to do so.

Paul D. Sleeper, chairman of the citizens' committee conducting the seal sale, said 41 women's organizations had pledged their assistance in operating the seal booths. More volunteers are needed, he added, and persons willing to offer their services were asked to communicate with Mrs. Charles H. Pierce at the headquarters of the District Tuberculosis Association, whose sole support derives from seal sale income.

Five per cent of the sale proceeds here go to the National Tuberculosis Association for its country-wide program, and the balance is used here for tuberculosis prevention.

Plea Voiced For New WPB Lumber Chief

By the Associated Press

A plea for the replacement of WPB Lumber Coordinator Ben Alexander with "someone friendly to lumber rather than its chief competitor" was received yesterday by Senators investigating the war program.

It was made in a telegram read into the Record by Senator Wallgren (Democrat) of Washington during testimony by a West Coast witness that a Canadian war embargo against exportation of logs to the United States seriously affected Northwest lumber production.

Identifying the sender as T. R. Robinson, secretary of the Robinson Manufacturing Co. of Everett, Wash., Senator Wallgren quoted the complainant as saying, at the end of a number of criticisms:

"Also urge lumber coordinator, now Alexander, be someone friendly to lumber rather than chief competitor."

Headed Masonite

WPB officials told reporters that Alexander was president of the Masonite Corporation, manufacturers of plastics, in Chicago before joining the WPB staff last February.

Chairman Truman (Democrat) of Missouri of the special defense investigating committee, informed Wallgren that Alexander had been called to testify tomorrow.

Wallgren drew from William B. Greeley, Seattle, Wash., manager of the West Coast Lumbermen's Association, a statement that Puget Sound mills, which formerly processed from 100 million to 240 million board feet of Canadian logs, were cut off from this supply more than a year ago by the embargo.

The witness said the War Production Board now was working on the problem of lifting the embargo and he hoped the efforts would be successful. He asserted the Canadian action had caused serious losses to American owners and mills and urged that efforts be made to reach an agreement with Canada for the exportation of the needed logs.

War and essential civilian demands for lumber were met, Greeley said, only by "stretching our facilities to the utmost."

Greeley said the task had been accomplished in the face of a shortage of manpower and mechanical equipment, including trucks, tractors and tires.

At first Army and Navy specifications were so rigid, Greeley said, that it was difficult to supply needs, but "they are substantially more liberal today than a year ago."

The Senate Defense Investigating Committee launched the hearings, it said, to find the "bottleneck" squeezing the lumber industry.

"The Corps of Engineers told us a few days ago their purchases are now current."

"To make this possible, we've overshipped production and reduced our stockpiles by one-third. The war requirements have been met, but not easily. The West Coast lumber situation is a tight one today."

D. C. Leaders Call Parley to Speed Pay-Raise Bill

The District Commissioners, Superintendent of Schools Frank W. Ballou and the school committee on legislation will confer Friday at 11 a. m. on expediting legislation providing pay increases for Board of Education employees.

Now before the Senate, the Federal overtime pay bill introduced by Senator James M. Mead (Democrat) of New York carries a rider allowing clerks, custodians and public school teachers 15 and 10 per cent pay increases, respectively.

"...we are perplexed, but not in despair;
"...for the things which are seen are temporal;
but the things which are not seen are eternal."

II CORINTHIANS 4:18, 19

THE THINGS WHICH ARE NOT SEEN ARE ETERNAL

WITH A DEEP SENSE OF GRATITUDE, we can look back over the months since Pearl Harbor as this Thanksgiving Day approaches.

Sometimes, as this great nation has roused itself, the news has brought us headlines of ships sunk, of crews torpedoed. We have seen pictures of the death of aircraft carriers, and cruisers, and destroyers.

From the Far East have come stories of American boys holding fox-holes against dive-bombers, machine-gun nests against waves of tanks—divisions crushing battalions.

We saw blasted towns, tortured jungles, Americans captured as prisoners of the Japanese.

Here at home there have been times of confusion in providing materials for the Armed Forces who will win this war.

But we have thrilled to the news of American victories at Midway, and the Solomons, to the incredible bombing of Tokyo, the smashing exploits of our fliers in China, the rousing news of the American invasion of North Africa.

And in our hearts we have known that the set-backs and discouragements, the delays, the bad news, do not reflect this country of ours.

THOSE are the things that are seen. Those are the things that are temporal.

We cannot see a nation of 130 million Americans, united and determined to be worthy of those boys at Bataan and Guadalcanal and North Africa.

We cannot see a factory worker as he bends over his punch-press, nor the glint in his eyes as hard as the steel under his hand.

We cannot see the jut of the jaw of a plane worker as he tightens the connections on the panel-board of a bomber's gun turret.

We cannot see a farmer in a small Mid-Western state, hearing the news on his radio as he comes in from the fields for his dinner. We cannot see the look on his face as he goes back to his plowing.

We cannot see the faces of factory executives working with the uniformed representatives of the Army and Navy on increasing production of vital war materials.

We cannot see the hunch of the shoulders of men in Washington, in high places and low, as they bend to the greatest tasks in the history of mankind—tasks that need the faith of a nation to support them.

These are things which are not seen—the divine sparks that are eternal.

Let's not stop when we have counted the material resources of this nation of ours—the mines, the plants, the farms, the capacity for conversion, the shipyards, the assembly lines, the genius for production.

These are the raw materials of Victory. These are the weapons we are forging.

But Victory will come from things deeper far than these. It will come from the unconquerable, unquenchable resourcefulness and courage that built this nation.

And it will come from the wrath in American hearts when treachery and deceit seem to be winning against those who can't fight back—the white heat of righteous anger, to bring justice back into this war-torn world.

These are things which aggressors cannot understand. These are things which Americans know in their hearts. This is the stuff of which miracles are made. These are the things which are eternal.

FOR MANY MONTHS it has been the privilege of Crosley to convert our eight war plants to the production of precision materials for the soldiers and sailors who will win this war.

Crosley engineering skill is totally devoted to war purposes. More than twenty years of experience in mass production of microscopic accuracy is delivering a volume of war material three times greater than the best peace-time output of Crosley radios, refrigerators, gas and electric ranges, washing machines, ironers and the Crosley Car. Even this volume will be doubled early in 1943.

The Crosley organization is only one great group of Americans whose duty it is to support the Armed Forces all over the world who are bringing Victory to the United States and its Allies—a great group reflecting the eternal fire that burns in American hearts on this Thanksgiving Day.

WPB to Seek Views of D. C. Brides On Furniture Simplification Plan

Measure for Purpose Of Selecting Styles To Be Discarded

The War Production Board's Office of Civilian Supply has decided to interview prospective brides and bridegrooms at the District Marriage License Bureau to learn what kind of furniture they would like to buy, it was learned yesterday.

The unusual step is being taken, it is understood, as part of a study of the kinds of furniture that should be retained under a program of concentration and simplification of the furniture-making industry.

A program of concentration which would permit the manufacture of only a few lines of furniture in a few widely separated localities has been under consideration by the Office of Civilian Supply for some time. Adoption of the program was recently given a stimulus by Economic Stabilization Director James F. Byrnes who asked WPB to study means of eliminating nonessential civilian goods to save manpower.

WPB officials have contacted District marriage license officials and secured permission to interview license applicants, it was learned. The furniture industry is considered an excellent subject for concentration since its many diverse lines can be simplified and since many nonessential pieces of furniture can be eliminated.

The British furniture industry has been highly concentrated already with production of new furniture allowed only for newly-weds and persons who have been bombed out. All furniture manufactured is of an inexpensive "utility" type made within a fixed price range. Whether the survey of American newly-weds furniture tastes would extend beyond Washington could not be learned. However, it is understood that previous requests for personnel to enable the Office of Civilian Supply and the Office of Price Administration to maintain a continuous Nation-wide survey to the consumer "pulse" had been turned down.

Cleveland Rabbi Addresses Zionists At Installation

Zionists need Palestine in which to live, Rabbi Barnett Brickner of Cleveland, Ohio, told a capacity audience at an installation meeting of the Louis D. Brandeis District of the Zionist Organization of America, at the Jewish Community Center, last night.

"Need creates justification," Rabbi Brickner said. "Need will determine our place in Palestine at the postwar peace conferences."

Eleven officers were installed, including Rabbi Isadore Breslan, who took office as president for the sixth time. Others installed were: Isadore Herschfeld, honorary president; Paul Himmelfarb, honorary vice president; Isadore S. Turover, first vice president; Mrs. John M. THANKSGIVING 1942

"But soon a tide Of men and guns And thundering wings Obliterating Axis things..."

—QUOTATION FROM CLINTON MESSAGE LABOR DAY 1942

Just months have passed
Since we have hoped
And prayed
The Tide would turn...
But who'd have guessed
That 60 days
From THEN
Would be the start!

Amid the toil
And sweat and blood
We couldn't see the plan
Nor the fruits of
Our accomplishments...
Rushed as we were
And blind...
Blind to the truth
That Freedom here—
With all its faults
And ills—
Is infinitely stronger
Than the strongest Tyrants' wills!

So let's give Thanks
This Hallowed Day,
That those Who came for Freedom
Can REST... and know
That even THERE,
In lands they had to flee,
New hope is born...
New fervent hope
That Pilgrims ALL are we Who come at last
And will not stop
No never stop
Till EVERYONE IS FREE!

Jeffers Bares Facts In Anti-Ration Drive

Places Issue Before House Group;
Thousands of Cards Reported in Campaign

By Robert DeVore
Post Staff Writer

Rubber Director William M. Jeffers yesterday gave a House Interstate Commerce subcommittee evidence of an organized postal card campaign to kill Nation-wide gasoline rationing which, he disclosed, has reached the stage in one section of the country where a "combination" of workers has threatened to quit their jobs unless the rationing program is revoked.

Repeating an assertion he made last week that the campaign is being financed by "people who ought to know better," Jeffers made it clear that he believes the organizers of the drivers, and not the war workers, are responsible for their attitude.

Between five and ten thousand printed postal cards, identical save for signatures, protesting national gasoline rationing have been received by him, Jeffers disclosed. In addition, he said, "thousands" of letters have been addressed to Economic Stabilization Director James F. Byrnes. The letters, he stated, were sent to his office.

Something Better to Do

"They (the letters) were not addressed to me, so they are not being opened," Jeffers declared. "I have something better to do."

Sample cards were submitted to the committee by the director.

Meanwhile, it was learned, facts obtained by Jeffers' office concerning the campaign are to be "spelled out" by the rubber director at a press conference at 11 a. m. tomorrow.

Jeffers' office has been aware of the existence of an organized anti-rationing drive for several weeks and has had it under surveillance. The drive is known to have originated in Indianapolis, Ind., and to have spread over the State and among war workers in Detroit, Mich.

Jeffers told the subcommittee he believed the campaign to be a "pretty serious thing," particularly as it has involved war workers who, he said, are not the "type" of men to go through with a threat to refuse to work.

Neither members of Congress nor oil-producing States are responsible for the campaign, Jeffers stated under interrogation by Representative Boren (Democrat), of Oklahoma. He attributed the "tremendous amount of opposition" to gas rationing to the fact that there is plenty of motor fuel west of East Coast States, but his reasoning was challenged by the subcommittee chairman, Representative Lea (Democrat), of California.

"Something Anomalous"

Lea stated that the subcommittee, sounding board for the congressional anti-gas rationing bloc, was well aware that the purpose of Nation-wide rationing was to save rubber. The subcommittee, he said, believed that there was "something anomalous in restricting the use of a plentiful article to restrict the use of a scarce article."

Lea said the subcommittee objected to the "arbitrariness" of gas rationing and was not convinced, at least when it made a report to Congress last July, that rubber could not be rationed directly. Boren said restricting gasoline use to conserve rubber was, to many people, "like amputating a leg to cure a toothache."

Jeffers emphasized that unless Nation-wide rationing goes into effect December 1, as scheduled, the country, in his opinion, will be gambling on the chance that synthetic rubber plants will live up to expectations of their engineers and thus will provide a substitute for crude rubber and give the military and civilians tires they need. He disclosed that he has issued instructions to Price Administrator Leon Henderson, who will have ty rubber director, told the subcommittee that the United States crude stockpile on October 31 was 468,000 tons and is being whittled down at the rate of about 30,000 tons a month while imports are running about 2000 tons a month.

Dutch Expose Nazi Extortion System in Sale of Exit Permits; Britain, United States Warn Against Abetting Scheme

By the Associated Press

London, Nov. 24.—The Netherlands government-in-exile charged Germany today with organizing a vast scheme of extortion by selling exit permits from occupied territory for great sums and said it would combat the traffic with every means in cooperation with the British and United States governments.

"Relatives and friends in Allied and neutral territory receive a communication that persons in occupied territory will be allowed to emigrate on condition that a considerable sum, in the currency of a neutral country, be made available to the enemy," it said.

"In some cases the request emanates from the prospective emigrant. In other cases the attempt is made through associates of the enemy in neutral territory. The request is sometimes accompanied by an open or veiled threat that those concerned will be sent to a concentration camp should the ransom not be forthcoming."

"Evidence which has reached the Netherlands government and the governments of the United Kingdom and the United States indicates that the practices are organized by the German authorities and that our enemies are doing their utmost to increase their holdings of neutral currency."

The sums demanded, it said, are very large—sometimes as high as the equivalent of $20,000 a head.

"The Netherlands government, after consultation with the British and United States governments," it was announced, "reluctantly have come to the conclusion that they cannot yield to German attempts at extortion."

It said that while a few might escape "the sadism and terror of the Nazis," there remained the accumulated misery and starvation of those left in occupied territory and "they will remain subjected to Nazi rule as long as the enemy's foreign assets will enable him to stave off the day of his defeat and the liberation of the oppressed European peoples."

It added that "submission to intimidation is incitement to increased pressure."

Lord Selborne, minister of economic warfare, made a similar statement in the House of Lords.

He warned that all persons making payments or facilitating the traffic would be regarded as "being engaged in transactions for the benefit of the enemy" and would be put on the British blacklist. If living in the United Kingdom, he said, they would be liable to prosecution under the Trading with the Enemy Act.

Aneta, Netherlands news agency, said that at the same time official Dutch sources disclosed several cases of attempted extortion of ransom by German authorities.

A former Rotterdam merchant now living in Latin America received a letter saying that 16 members of his family and his staff were in mortal danger and might be deported to Poland at any moment. A ransom of 300,000 Swiss francs was demanded.

(The franc currently is valued at 23.4 cents.)

In another case 100,000 Swiss francs were demanded for permission for a family to leave the Netherlands for South America. Subsequent demands raised the amount to 150,000 and then to 200,000 francs.

U. S. Warns Against Purchase of Permits

The State Department issued a formal warning yesterday that any person participating in the purchase of exit permits for relatives or friends in German-occupied territory would be regarded as a person trading with the enemy "and thereby be publicly designated as an enemy."

Italy Wants to Quit War, Halifax Says

River Terrace Tenants Fight to Keep Gas Heaters

Tenants of 50 houses in the River Terrace development, thirty-third Street Northeast between East Capitol and Blaine Streets, yesterday filed a complaint in District Court to prevent conversion of their gas heaters to coal furnaces under a War Production Board order issued last February.

Justice Matthew F. McGuire, sitting in motions court, was scheduled to hear arguments in the case next Monday.

The complaint seeks three injunctions—one to enjoin Herbert S. Marks, chief of WPB's power division, from enforcing the order; another to force the Washington Gas Light Co. to furnish gas beyond December 1, the deadline set by WPB for settlement of the four-month-old controversy; and a third to prevent builders of the colony from making the conversion.

Five tenants filed the suit in behalf of 50 others. They were listed as Elwood E. Stump, Andrew A. Casey, Keith W. Johnson, Ralph R. West and Joseph Hurvitz.

Reciting the history of the case, the plaintiffs told the court that Marks had denied their appeal from the order on August 14. The order, issued February 16, provided that no utility could deliver gas to certain specified areas, unless it was shown that the "foundation under the main part of the structure in which the (heating) equipment is to be installed was completed prior to March 1, 1942."

The tenants argued in their petition to WPB that cement footings for the gas heaters had been poured early in February and that the stoves themselves were on their way from the factory. These facts, it was contended, brought the houses under the exception described in the order.

A plea for reconsideration of the case was filed with WPB on September 1, the petition continued, but this, too, was turned down two months later. During pendency of this second petition WPB authorized the Washington Gas Light Co. to furnish gas until December 1, following numerous complaints from tenants.

Myron Davy and Frank J. Murphy, owners of the development, joined the families in their battle with WPB, contending that conversion of the heaters would result in waste of war-vital metals, since the gas heaters could be used only in homes especially constructed to house them.

Judge Vacates Va.-Md. Milk Contract Order

Following a conference in his chambers, Justice Matthew F. McGuire of District Court yesterday vacated an order he signed Tuesday to compel the Maryland-Virginia Milk Producers Association to comply with a contract for delivery of 9000 gallons of milk daily to the Embassy-Fairfax Dairy.

Ground for the reversal of his decision, Justice McGuire said, was evidence introduced by the milk association that it could not obtain enough milk to meet its customers' orders. Elwood Seal, defense attorney, told the court, however, that efforts would be made to distribute available supplies proportionately to the dairies.

The court proceeding originated in an injunction filed Monday by Embassy-Fairfax to force the association to bring its daily shipments of milk up to the contracted 9000 gallons. Most of the milk, the petition pointed out, went to 20 Army and Navy bases nearby. The plaintiff contended that it was being required to bear a disproportionate share of an alleged shortage.

The milk producer's counterclaim that it was could not get enough milk to meet the contract was borne out yesterday when a Department of Agriculture representative told Justice McGuire that a "real milk shortage" threatened the Washington area. McGuire said he was also advised that a dearth of manpower made it difficult to obtain milk from other areas.

Further conferences between officials of the two firms were scheduled for today. If a compromise is not reached, the court will hear arguments Monday on Embassy-Fairfax's complaint.

Nazi War Lords Force Ally to Keep Up Fight, He Asserts

By the Associated Press
Norfolk, Va., Nov. 24.—Lord Halifax asserted here today he had no doubt that Italy "would like to get out of the war, but Germany won't let her do that."

There is no love lost between Italy and Germany, the British Ambassador told a press conference on his arrival at the Norfolk Naval Operating Base for an inspection tour of naval installations, and the effect of this feeling "will place an added strain on Hitler's war machine."

Devastating bombing raids such as Genoa and other Italian cities have undergone in recent weeks will cause the Italians' desire to be out of the war to increase, Halifax declared, but added that Italy "is not a free country and you will see her become more and more a German occupied country. Italy is as much an occupied country as Belgium or France."

The action of Nazi Field Marshal Rommel in leaving thousands of Italian troops to their fate in the retreat of the Africa Corps across Egypt and Libya did nothing to improve existing feelings between the Italian people and Germany, the Ambassador pointed out.

Accompanied by a small party of officials from the British Embassy, Lord Halifax came to Hampton Roads, he said, to inspect repairs being made to British warships in this area and to "get an idea of the wonderful development of your naval base, which I understand is the largest in the world."

In every case of a British ship repaired in a United States shipyard, he said, he had received reports that the ships were repaired ahead of schedule "and fitted up quickly to get back to the job. I have no doubt that the same thing is being done" at yards in the Hampton Roads area.

Dr. Poling Urges Churches to Work With Boys in Camp

Through following work with their boys into camp, churches can make their greatest contribution to the morale of America's armed forces, Dr. Daniel A. Poling said Monday night.

Dr. Poling, editor of the Christian Herald and president of the World's Christian Endeavor Union, addressed a Christian Service Men's League rally at Western Presbyterian Church, 1906 H Street Northwest, sponsored by the District Endeavor Union and Alumni Fellowship.

In spite of the rain, more than 800 Christian Endeavorers of all ages turned out, as well as more than 100 soldiers and sailors.

Seaman William Fife, formerly president of the Central Presbyterian Endeavor Society here, offered a prayer, and Charles Hardie, yeoman third class, U. S. N., read a scripture. Pvt. Robert Rhodes of Fort Belvoir told how the first endeavor unit was formed there in August, 1941. Merritt L. Smith, former president of the District Alumni Endeavor Fellowship, presided.

Camp Holabird Officer Accused By Maryland Girl

Baltimore, Nov. 24 (AP).—Lieut. James B. Nichols, 34, of Dallas, Tex., Army Air Corps officer stationed at Camp Holabird, was ordered held for Grand Jury action on a rape charge involving a 17-year-old girl today after a hearing before Police Magistrate Elmer J. Hammer.

Nichols, who appeared with his uniform stripped of Army insignia, was held without bail.

The girl who accused Nichols told Magistrate Hammer that she accompanied the officer unwillingly from a dance at a downtown hotel to the officer's room.

She related that upon returning home she told her parents, who summoned the family physician and police.

Nichols made no statement.

Supreme Court Finds Itself Unable to Rule in Alcoa Case

By the Associated Press
Because of lack of a quorum of six justices, the Supreme Court is unable to decide the celebrated case in which the Justice Department charges the Aluminum Co. of America with violation of the Sherman Antitrust Act by possessing a monopoly in the production and sale of aluminum.

This leaves in effect a decision of the Federal District Court at New York holding that the Justice Department had failed to prove its accusations. The ruling was given by Federal District Judge Francis G. Gaffey after the longest trial in history—lasting 26 months. Ten days were required for the judge to deliver the oral opinion.

A Government attorney said yesterday that notification had been received from the Supreme Court that it lacked the six justices required by law to pass upon the measure, since four had declared themselves ineligible. Under this situation, a quorum of six would not be provided when the existing vacancy on the nine-man court is filled.

The Aluminum Co. had pointed out in its brief filed with the tribunal that Justices Jackson and Murphy had been Attorneys General and Justice Reed had been Solicitor General when the case was pending in the Justice Department and that Chief Justice Stone had disqualified himself for an unannounced reason for passing on previous litigation affecting the Aluminum Co.

Unless some way out of the situation is arranged, the court will be unable to pass on the case until one of the present disqualified justices leaves the bench and a successor is appointed.

Seventy-five-year-old Chief Justice Stone is eligible to retire, but all indications are that he will continue to serve indefinitely.

Voluntary Butter Rationing Starts in Baltimore

Baltimore, Nov. 24 (AP).—Voluntary rationing of butter has been started in Baltimore, with the prospect that self-imposed restrictions may become even more stringent during the next several weeks.

Joseph Smelkinson, former president of the Baltimore Butter and Egg Exchange and one of the largest of the city's butter jobbers, said Baltimore is feeling severely the result of the freezing of warehouse stocks by the Government, although the city is not among the 35 butter market centers directly affected.

Members of the trade in Baltimore explained that most of the city's butter comes from Chicago.

Steinberg Joins Rationing Board

Dean S. S. Steinberg of the College of Engineering at the University of Maryland has been named a member of the Prince Georges County War Price and Rationing Board and chairman of the board's transportation committee, it was announced yesterday by Leo J. McCormack, State OPA director.

Dean Steinberg's committee will make a study of the larger industrial plants and other organizations in the county to determine the needs of their employees for gasoline and tires. The committee will operate under Leonard H. Burch, chairman of the county rationing board.

20 Ships Sunk in '42 In St. Lawrence

U-Boat Menace Declared Still Grave; Fear Submarines May Land Saboteurs

Ottawa, Nov. 24.—Twenty ships have been sunk by enemy U-boats in the St. Lawrence River and Gulf this year, Navy Minister Angus MacDonald said today in a statement which pictured the submarine situation in the North Atlantic as still very grave.

MacDonald said further that it was quite possible for U-boats to land men in remote areas of the Canadian coast for sabotage purposes, just as was done at two points on the United States coast.

He added that there were no reports of any landings by submarine crews to purchase supplies.

Of the 20 ships sunk in St. Lawrence waters this year, MacDonald said 14 were sent down in the area served by the Gaspe Navy Base and 6 in Cabot Strait and the Strait of Belle Isle.

British Vessel Sunk

An East Coast Port, Nov. 24 (AP).—A small British cargo ship was sunk by a single torpedo from an Axis submarine in the Caribbean Sea early in February, the Navy announced today.

Two Chinese, first survivors of the attack to land in the United States, told Naval officers there were 90 men aboard the vessel and that all survived. The Chinese said two submarines surfaced and surveyed the area after the ship went down.

The merchantman's crew abandoned ship in four lifeboats. One of them, a motor boat, towed the other three to a nearby Caribbean island.

Japan's Temple Bells To Be Melted Into Arms

Bern, Switzerland, Nov. 24 (AP).—Temple bells in Japan will be melted down for armaments, the German newspaper Deutsche Allgemeine reported, quoting a Tokyo dispatch.

Japan, like Italy, is short of metals, and took her cue from the Italians, who long ago started seizing church bells. The Fascist section was deplored recently by Italian parish priests, who said they did not want to see "these symbols of peace used to make instruments of war and death."

Voltage with a Vengeance

BACK of almost every machine that is humming in America's war plants is the unseen powerful force that makes it hum... ELECTRICITY!

But how did we get all of this power, so suddenly and so quickly? For America's power demands pyramided almost overnight... and there wasn't always enough extra generating capacity lying around idle in the spots where it was needed. There's where the American power companies performed a miracle, throwing into the job their ready-and-waiting plans of inter-connection of systems, and expansion. And presto, there was the voltage... with a vengeance.

But existing power transmission lines could not hope to carry the additional load. Here again, additional wires and cables were reared to the skies across the land, reaching war plants in the widely scattered areas, many of them remotely located. For every war-plant machine, when installed, must find its power ready and waiting, wired in and ready for use.

It speaks well for the teamwork of the American Electrical Industry that each machine DID find the voltage waiting... with a vengeance.

It's the American way of doing things. Teamwork! Washington analyzed the needs, guided and coordinated the tremendous enthusiasm which the Industry put into the task. Much of the credit goes, too, to the men in the ranks, the skilled labor, the electricians, the contractors... for today the working man's clothes are as much a badge of all-out patriotic effort as the uniform of the soldier.

In a war of armament production, it is power that plays an all-important part. And America has the power... electrical power... "voltage with a vengeance".

The Electrical Industry Will Keep the War Plants Powered to Produce

Its Electrical Contractors, and the skilled Electricians in Industry's employ, will tackle the electrical maintenance job with the same patriotic eagerness they put into getting the plants built.

Before the walls were complete or the roofs put on the new plants, the electrical workers had swarmed on the jobs, run in the feeder cables, installed the wiring. As soon as machinery arrived, it was hooked up and ready to roll.

Electricians did their bit—with a vengeance. So did the Electrical Supply Houses, everywhere.

Suppose 'twas Tenakee, Arizona. Right there was an Electrical Supply House and its warehouse stocks of a thousand electrical items. 'Twas just like having a hundred or two electrical manufacturers just around the corner. And the electrical contractor who installed the material has just as complete service in Tenakee as he would in Philadelphia, Cleveland or anywhere else.

And so it will be in the continuing job of keeping the plants going. Any plant, anywhere, is just a few miles from an established Electrical Wholesaler. It is from his stocks that emergency needs will be filled, and the machinery kept busy at its vital war tasks.

Day Nurseries

The allegation by a Board of Trade subcommittee that District day nurseries as an adjunct of the school system would be "just one more move toward socialism, such as exists in Germany, Italy, and certain other countries, where the children are practically raised by the state," shows an understanding neither of the nursery system generally nor of the peculiar needs of the District. There has been no evidence that the establishment of nurseries in Britain or in this country has involved any authoritarian regimentation of the young. On the contrary, they insure more individual attention by the mothers themselves. Studies have shown that mothers who avail themselves of nursery and after-school care for their children are a much better influence upon them than mothers overtaken with home worries as well as jobs.

Certainly, if the community does not take responsibility for proper child care at a time when mothers are being drawn more and more into war work, we may find ourselves simply storing up a future problem in juvenile delinquency. Private nurseries, no matter how well conducted, cannot begin to meet demands. For in this crowded city there are no facilities comparable to schools for housing public nursery projects. It is to be hoped that ill-considered statements offered by members of a group which admitted they had not read the District nursery legislation will not further delay the bill now in the Senate to allow the schools to be used for nurseries.

Alcan Highway

In a way it is unfortunate that the pressure of events in the Mediterranean and Pacific diverted public attention this past weekend from an event of major significance right here on our own continent. That was the completion and opening for traffic of the Alaska-Canada Highway. For the Alcan, as it will undoubtedly be known, may eventually be classed with the great highways of history—highways, indeed, like the Great North Road of the Romans—which have played a vital part in shaping history. Certainly, it is not too much to expect that the Alcan will facilitate the opening up of a vast area the material resources of which have hardly begun to be tapped. Premier Aberhart of Alberta recently stressed the implications of such a development. He was quite right, it seems to us, in anticipating the peacetime benefits that will accrue as the result of this engineering triumph.

As of today the Alcan's strategic value is, of course, uppermost in mind. And its completion well ahead of schedule bears witness, first, to the importance assigned to it by our military command, and second, to the miracle of construction and maintenance wrought by the Army Corps of Engineers and by civilian contractors and crews. Should the need arise, we can now ship men, weapons and supplies by land all the way to Alaskan defense outposts. Quite apart from the Alcan's ultimate usefulness after the war, therefore, we have gained the immediate advantage of a bolstered defense in the region which commands the northern Pacific approach to this country.

Exporting Factories

Conceived as a wartime measure to save shipping space, the project for transferring surplus plant equipment to the countries of Latin America may well bring permanent benefits far greater than the immediate gains. The advantages of disposing of industrial machinery that we cannot use at home for war or essential civilian production are quite clear. American owners of idle equipment will be partly compensated for loss of business, while the countries on the receiving end will be able to produce articles that they can no longer obtain from us. Some of the friction resulting from wartime trade bans and shipping shortages will be removed and the ties of political friendship correspondingly strengthened.

In the long run this wholesale transfer of industrial equipment may prove to be even more significant. For it will give impetus to the industrialization of agrarian countries dependent upon imports of manufactured goods. Some short-sighted individuals may argue that the United States is destroying her export markets by encouraging potential customers to "make their own." It is true that Latin-American demands for our goods will change in character as industrialization progresses. But it is likewise true that industrially advanced peoples possess much greater buying power per capita than those who toil long hours for low pay because of the lack of efficient production aids.

Exclusionist trade and tariff policies designed to shut out foreign goods become more feasible, of course, after a country has achieved a measure of economic self-sufficiency. But there is little reason to fear that the assistance to be given our Latin-American neighbors in this time of crisis will encourage them to embrace exclusionist trade policies. On the contrary, tangible evidence of our desire to alleviate the hardships of wartime trade disturbances will probably make them more eager to resume normal trading relations with us when peace is restored.

Trouble Ahead

It is a great pity that the War Department has not yet seen fit to handle news about the North African campaign as adeptly as it has handled the operation itself. For, unless we are very much mistaken, the department is on the verge of reaping recrimination of a brand long familiar to the Navy. Such recrimination has to do, of course, with the withholding of releasable information. Recently the Navy—grudgingly, to be sure—has adopted a somewhat more liberal policy in this respect. But it does seem as though the Army should take a page from Navy experience in the all-important business of keeping the American public as well informed about strategic developments as is militarily justifiable.

In the early stages of the North African landings, communication difficulties undoubtedly hampered the accumulation and distribution of news. But we are now well into the third week of the campaign, and we are still without details of the Allied advance which are common property of the enemy. He knows—and so does the Army—where our forces are fighting, what progress they have made, and what kind of opposition is being encountered. Beyond very hazy round-up summaries, however, the American public knows nothing of all this. Far be it from us to cite the German propaganda machine as an illustrious example. But when the Germans invaded Russia, their Propaganda-Kompanien were so well organized and possessed so much authority at the front that in a matter of hours after the initial aggression surprisingly detailed stories and pictures were on their way to Berlin and thence to the outside world.

We are not suggesting, of course, the distribution from North Africa of biased information such as is continually put out by the German PK, as the organization of front reporters and photographers is known. What we are suggesting is a more liberal military attitude toward releasable news which is certainly in the possession of American newsmen on the North African front, but which is smothered somewhere along the censorship line. There has already been enough censorship of the diplomatic aspect of the campaign to last the American people throughout the war. But if the Army is going to continue adding to this censorship its censorship to date of military action, the result will be a mounting clamor for news which will not, and should not, be stifled.

Dakar

When Morocco and Algeria were successfully occupied by American and British troops early this month, the great West African port and naval base of Dakar was isolated. Sooner or later we could have starved it into submission or reduced it by siege in case of necessity. Fortunately, neither action is now needed. Acting at the suggestion of Admiral Darlan, Pierre Boisson, the Governor General of French West Africa, has agreed to adhere to the Allied cause.

At one fell swoop, therefore, and without a drop of blood shed, a vital strategic center has been neutralized. Maybe it will be placed entirely at our disposal. Should this happen—and present circumstances would seem to favor such a development—a considerable military force and a sizable naval force would be added to United Nations strength in Africa. Concentrated at Dakar are at least 3 French cruisers, 1 battleship, 3 destroyers and 13 submarines. Moreover, possession of Dakar will enable the Allies to intensify their antisubmarine activities in the southwestern Atlantic, where the U-boats have been particularly active of late. Finally, the flying distance between Brazil and Africa will be shortened, since Dakar is only 1600 miles from the "bulge" of Brazil.

The benefits we are thus likely to derive from M. Boisson's move are great and the price we are paying for them relatively slight. The adherence of French West Africa to the Allied cause would, at the very least, have been delayed had it not been for the opportunistic arrangement made by our military authorities with Admiral Darlan. At worst we might have had to waste time and energy in neutralizing or taking over Dakar. Yet we cannot for a moment forget that this policy of opportunism, while it has thus far paid great dividends, also has its disadvantages and its dangers.

Despite the efforts of the censors, who have kept from us the details but not the fact, we know that British public opinion has been shocked by the deal made with Darlan. We, likewise, know that the Fighting French continue to be worried, despite the President's designation of that deal as a "temporary expedient," over the possibility that Darlan's rule in French North Africa will be allowed to continue indefinitely. In other words, our very real and very encouraging political successes in that region, which have made possible very important military victories, should not blind us to the need of working out a comprehensive policy toward France and the French. Right now we have one policy in French North Africa, another in New Caledonia and Equatorial Africa, where the Fighting French are in control, and still another in the French West Indies, where an arrangement with Admiral Robert, who has broken with Vichy, has just been renewed.

Treason Trial

The three men convicted of treason at Chicago have been sentenced to die. Their wives have been sentenced to 25 years in prison and to pay fines of $10,000 each. The punishment is stern but just. Their treason consisted of having aided young Herbert Haupt, one of the Nazi saboteurs who were executed here in Washington earlier this year. It was a crime which might have had the most serious consequences for the country to which these six defendants had sworn allegiance and one which might easily have cost hundreds or thousands of innocent American lives.

And yet the fact that four of the defendants were bound to Haupt by the closest ties of blood and that the two others were bound to the Haupt family by ties of friendship gives this case a certain aspect of high tragedy. Loyalty to kindred and to friendship, and perhaps also some perverse loyalty to a Fatherland they had formally renounced led these men to a deed of grossest treachery to their adopted country and to their neighbors. Even in the midst of war, even while recognizing the enormity of their crime and the full justice of the penalty, it is possible to feel for these people some of the pity that one might feel for the self-deceived protagonist of some Greek drama.

More important than mere pity, however, is the knowledge that the sentence was imposed only after a full and fair trial. The contrast of the judicial institutions by which they were convicted to those of Nazi Germany is so eloquent that the judge himself could not refrain from mentioning it. The defense counsel exhausted every legal device. The jury was selected with the greatest care, and when the verdict was returned, each member was obliged to concur individually. Sentence was delayed for nearly a week to permit the defense to prepare a motion for a new trial or pleas for mitigation. Even now that sentence is passed, the executions of the three men will not take place until two months hence, thus permitting their counsel full opportunity to carry the case to higher courts or to seek a commutation of the sentence.

And yet, since the evidence was presented, there has not been the slightest doubt that the men are guilty under the law. Could there be a more striking contrast between our ways and the ways of our enemies?

Unreconstructed Boer

The death of Gen. J. B. M. Hertzog comes like a postscript to the discussion last week on the British Empire. For 15 years up to 1939 Hertzog was Premier of the Union of South Africa. He succeeded and was succeeded by General Smuts, who in turn took over the premiership from General Botha. These three names span the 32-year-old history of the Union. They are Boer names, yet the Union they headed was formed as the result of the Anglo-Boer War, which was won by the British. That Botha and Smuts now rank as great statesmen in British history is due to the fact that with peace went magnanimity. The stern Hertzog, to be sure, remained for years "unreconstructed." At one time he would have no truck with any affiliation with the British. But when he became Premier in 1924 he dropped the old secessionist battle cry, and he, too, came out in favor of cooperation. Actually he became one of the architects of the British Commonwealth as remodeled under the Statute of Westminster of 1924.

In office he found that there could be no future for the Union except as an independent dominion within the British Commonwealth.

The stuff of modern South African politics before the war was the conflict between the pro-British Smuts and the nationalist Hertzog. In 1933, however, they decided that, except for one difference, they could work together, and Smuts became Hertzog's deputy premier. Unhappily, the difference came to the surface when war broke out in 1939. Smuts had stood for a common policy with Britain in war, Hertzog for benevolent neutrality. South Africa went the Smuts way, and Hertzog was pushed back among the African extremists. But even in this camp the old man found little hospitality. Soured by his experience, he resigned his seat in Parliament and retired to his farm. He died at a time when his country is fighting side by side with the British in all the theaters of war. A tenth of the whole population are in uniform and they have been raised voluntarily. South Africa in war is a witness to the binding nature of ties which have become invisible.

DONE

Once, when trees were empty through the town,
Our last oak besieged and shaken down,
The wind came plunging through the leaves
And then
Hurled them high to hang them back again.

All the sunlight started raining leaves—
The only time I ever knew of fun
In trying to undo what had been done!

Letters To The Editor

"B" And "C" Rations

The article of November 20, "Rationing Changes Not to Alter Rule for Pleasure, Business," is, I believe, the instigator of laughter emitted from the public in general, especially since the race-track probe involving holders of B and C books was made.

As I understand this gas-rationing set-up, the A book ration is the basic element all motorists are entitled to use as they so desire. Of course B and C books are supposed to be a supplement to the A book. Most of the B and C book holders have been allotted just barely enough gas to commute from their homes to their jobs, hence it is quite amazing to understand that they are now entitled to use 90 miles of driving for nonessential purposes.

I am of the opinion that I voice the sentiments of all the middle fellows, since we have to fill our cars to capacity with fellow workers who sometimes prove to be nuisances and add to the wear and tear to upholstery and floor mats. Yet we smile and say "We're doing our part for the boys." Yes, we want to do our bit, but why make us feel like fools, cheats and inconsiderate boos when we say "We need gas, we need tires, to carry on our part of this vast war program!"

Time—working hours—are lost trying to obtain same.

I am a warworker in the Navy annex in Arlington and commute daily from Maryland, a distance of 24 miles a day. I supply transportation accommodations for four people in the morning and five to six besides myself in the afternoon. We leave before daybreak (I don't believe the rooster has even crowed) to get to work, trying to avoid congested traffic and rush like mad to do the same in the afternoon. The result, "A mere pittance of humanity after finally reaching home."

It has been advertised via newspapers that a much more thorough investigation would be made of those applications submitted by persons living near railway and his line. Unfortunately those in authority have forgotten, since they are used to riding and enjoying the services of a chauffeur, what little accommodations are afforded by streetcars and buses during this war emergency, what with the population increased twice. If this mode of transportation was used by me I would have to leave home at 6 a. m.; transfer four times before 8 a. m., and then be tardy, due to inadequate facilities at the Lincoln Memorial.

Nevertheless, we want to tell the motor club to forget about pleasure driving (they have, in England and other warring countries) and keep those cars moving that are essential, and win this war.

Our Relations With Italy

My faith in the wisdom and integrity of the Department of State is unshakable but I feel some misgivings regarding the present campaign to lure Italy away from the Axis. Such a campaign, if successful, will, in my opinion, incur obligations which may compromise our position in the peace conference and menace just settlements for those countries which have been the special victims of Fascist imperialism.

Several times the President in his speeches has, with pity, enumerated states overrun by the Axis but never once has he included Albania, which, as a state, owed its existence very largely to Woodrow Wilson. The country's seizure was just as brutal as other invasions thought worthy of mention. The invasion was ordered by Mussolini who had posed as friend, ally and protector of the country. I wish to believe the President ignored Albania through an oversight, but the fact remains that of all the representatives here of invaded countries only the name of the Albanian minister was removed from the diplomatic list. Albanian patriots fought and died for 428 years for the independence which they lost overnight in 1939. Greece and Yugoslavia also have suffered murder, arson and repression at the hands of Italy and these wrongs can only be righted by peace through victory. Italy must be driven from Albania, as from Greece and Yugoslavia, and their prewar frontiers must be restored. Corfu and Crete must be returned to Greece which should also receive Italy's Aegean possessions, the Dodecanese Islands, which rightfully belong to Greece.

Zara should be incorporated in the new Yugoslav state together with Fiume which belongs naturally to Croatia. Also a self-sufficient Austria is essential to the future peace of Europe which makes it imperative that Italy yield up to the new Austria all of South Tirol, annexed after the first World War, along with Trieste to give an outlet to the sea, and Pola.

Libya should be awarded to Turkey with which it has strong cultural and spiritual ties and which will administer it sympathetically and well.

If anyone feels I am being harsh with Italy allow me to enumerate some of the areas which Italy expected to annex as a result of this war: All of the Dalmatian coast of Yugoslavia it now occupies together with Croatia; Nice, Savoy, Corsica and Tunisia, from France; also Egypt, Palestine, Trans-Saradina, the Lebanon and Syria and, possibly, Anatolia.

To seek to draw a line between the Axis tyrants and their followers who fight their battles is not only impractical but maudlin. In Italy, which has a double-ring ceremony, 25 million men and women with blatant enthusiasm contributed their gold wedding rings to financing the war to crush the independence of the hapless Ethiopians.

Fill justice to the victims of Fascist brutality requires that we avoid any deal like that by which Italy joined the Allies in 1915.

I have confidence that our Department of State will guard the rights of those brave little states which refused to sell themselves to Hitler and Mussolini rather than waste sympathy on an aggressor.

Ideas Of Dignity

Your malice toward the South is exhibited side by side with your intellectual shabbiness in your editorial of November 20 on the poll-tax debate. In one sentence of that editorial you said, "By now it is obvious, however, that the filibustering Southerners would rather block the anti-poll tax bill than preserve the dignity 'of the Senate.'"

In another sentence you said, "It is unsatisfactory, of course, to have any bill blocked by filibuster, but it would also be unwise for Congress to pass a bill so repugnant to the Constitution as this seems to be."

These Senators have taken an oath to uphold the Constitution of the United States. If they are convinced, as you are, that this bill is unconstitutional, they would be false to that oath if they failed to use every means to prevent its passage.

Is it your idea of dignity to be false to an oath? The Supreme Court nowhere in the Constitution is expressly given the power to hold an act of Congress unconstitutional. Yet it has consistently exercised that power on the ground that its members would be false to their oath in rendering a decision upholding a law inconsistent with the Constitution. Surely Senators should be equally honorable and refuse to pass an unconstitutional law.

Moral Weapons

"Open covenants openly arrived at." This statement was made by President Wilson, to express one of his strong beliefs. We should do well to keep it in mind at this time. For "oh wangled webs we weave, when once we practice to deceive." Joe Louis said: "We'll win because we are on God's side." If we are, our weapons will be honesty, directness, fearlessness, kindness.

Expediency—contrivance—artifice—down we go to "crafty device," "trick," "fraud"—at least, the dictionary shows the connection.

"Expediency," "propaganda"—away with them! G. M. U.

Pearl Harbor Day

Single candles should glow throughout the day. In all store windows, public buildings and in all homes on Pearl Harbor Day. "Lighting of the Candles" should be an appeal to the general public to buy more war bonds.

Ample time remains to push the idea to its fullest extent, if publicity is given immediately. Pearl Harbor Anniversary Day should be made an annual demonstration day by the lighting of the candles.

Starling Plague

I suggest you apply your pressure on the responsible officials who have neglected to clean up the disgraceful condition on Pennsylvania Avenue between Sixth and Ninth Streets. Washingtonians have been plagued for years at this season by the thousands of starlings who inhabit the trees and nearby buildings. A few rounds of buckshot might help to cause these unwelcome visitors to look for some other spot to roost.

The Post Impressionist

Lights

At the turning of the last century into this one, the City of St. Louis, Mo., boasted a mayor who became renowned for a phrase.

Those were days of lush money in the Mound City; days when the denizens were making preparations for a world's fair, to become known as the Louisiana Purchase Exposition; days when men and women of both good and evil repute, gravitated toward the scene; also, those were days when bribery in high places became rampant. Some officials went to the penitentiary; others fled from the impact of the two-fisted circuit attorney, Joseph Wingate Folk.

The mayor was not tainted, nor did a shadow of suspicion ever rest against him, a fact which gives him great credit because looters thronged corridors leading to his and other offices in the municipal building.

No. Happy-go-lucky Henry Ziegenheim did not owe his election to anyone with an axe to grind; he owed it to his happy-go-lucky handshake given citizens in the most populous wards, and to his technique when kissing babies.

One section of the city he did not visit was the West End, sparsely inhabited by those who could afford expensive homes; some of them misnamed mansions. The result could be foreseen: They did not like Henry, and he did not care for them.

So it came to pass, when a delegation from the West End visited the mayor in the fire trap known as the City Hall, and urged that better lights be set burning near their houses, that Henry Ziegenheim listened patiently, and after the spokesman had finished the plea, the round face of the mayor broke into a smile, and he dismissed the subject, saying, "You have the moon yet, ain't it?"

In all Missouri's history only one other phrase found such repetition; that was the apparently meaningless "Quit kickin' mah houn' dawg aroun'," which was on nearly everyone's lips during Champ Clark's campaign for the Democratic presidential nomination, which was captured by Woodrow Wilson.

But I have wandered from the subject, and shall switch back to the old home town in the early 1870's, when we had no street lights at all. There was the moon yet, at intervals, but when she ducked out of sight below the horizon, dense blackness settled upon the village, save for an occasional bright spot glowing from a window; and on Sunday and Thursday evenings a sight which a stranger in town might have considered a phenomenon. I saw it frequently when a small boy and would watch it from a second-story window of the old home.

The window faces Second Street and shortly before 8 o'clock on the evenings mentioned, lights would move along the board walk, some of them going east; others going west. All of them were about a foot above ground; perhaps two, three or four in a group, then an interval. Those lights revealed a few inches of pants, ditto skirts, and pants and skirts were moving along, keeping pace with the lights which were in lanterns carried by persons going to Sunday evening service, and on Thursdays to prayer meeting. The lights moving east were those of Congregational Church worshippers; those going west were Methodists and Episcopalians.

Because I was too young to go out at night, it is only hearsay that the first street light in the village was placed on a post near the town pump. Unfortunately the citizen who thus did honor his town failed to bear in mind that it lacked three days, or rather three nights, of Halloween.

My first recollection of what then was out-of-door illumination occurred in Cleveland, when I visited at the home of an aunt. Through a parlor window I watched for the lamplighter, who arrived at the corner shortly before dusk. He carried a short ladder, which he mounted as it rested against the post; he used scissors to trim the kerosene-lamp wick; with a discolored cloth he wiped the glass which protected the flame, then descending three steps to the ground, he moved on to the next corner with his ladder, the cloth and a small box. It was a single-man panorama wonderful for me.

Two years later, returning from a journey, I saw gas burning atop the lampposts.

And late in 1879, a miracle Electric Light blossomed. Early in 1878, Charles Francis Brush had brought the arc light into being, and 14 months later several of them were placed in service surrounding the 8-acre public square. Occasionally they spluttered, due to carbon points being brought into too close contact, but this was soon corrected and arc lights spread over the city which was the home town of the inventor.

Meanwhile, entomologists were puzzled by the appearance of white-winged insects, larger than moths, and declared they never had seen anything like them before, nor could they account for them by textbook information. Myriads of them flew from somewhere. They fluttered around the arc lights for an hour or so, then dropped to the ground. It is no exaggeration to say that every morning, during at least one spring and summer, pound after pound of these night visitors would be shoveled into wheelbarrows and carted away. They did not visit any other section of the city; always came in to die near the dazzling lights. When incandescent bulbs replaced the arc no more white wings came to Cleveland; that is, none of that species. They disappeared mysteriously as they had come.

The most beautiful display, so memory recalls, marked the long, curving water front of Rio de Janeiro and a road leading to the Tijuca foothills.

Public Employee Strike

By Mark Sullivan

Effects Paralysis Of Government

ON DECEMBER 9, the War Labor Board will hold a hearing on a dispute, including a strike, between the city government of Newark, N. J., and a union of city employees. The importance of this hearing lies in the fact that the Labor Board's decision will be a precedent. As it is put by a member of the Labor Board's panel handling the case:

"This case may be the first of many like cases to occur in American public life during the present emergency; and as such, the handling of this particular case will set a precedent or pattern for further cases to follow in many parts of the country."

One question involved is, have Government employees—city, State or Federal—the right to strike, as in fact the city employees of Newark did strike last month. To this question, the answer of the unions is yes. "Yes" is not only the answer of local unions, which actually have struck in Newark and other cities. It is also the answer of a National-wide union of Government employees, affiliated with the Congress of Industrial Organizations. The name of the union is "The State, County and Municipal Workers of America."

THIS NATIONAL UNION, when it was first organized, put into its constitution a declaration against strikes, saying: "It shall not be a policy of this organization to engage in strikes as a means of achieving its objectives." This declaration, it may be inferred, was put in the original constitution as an incident of starting the union and soliciting members throughout the country. Many Government employees might be willing to join a union, yet unwilling to practice strikes or picketing.

In September, 1941, however, the national union, in annual convention, revised its constitution—so as to authorize strikes. "After a local union has exhausted all other methods to attain its collective-bargaining objective." In pursuance of this asserted right, local unions of city employees have conducted several strikes, some very recent. The latest conspicuous ones were the one in Newark, and one in Cincinnati, Ohio, both during October. The Cincinnati strike was by employees of the city water system, belonging to a union affiliated with the United Mine Workers. In this strike, the city authorities used prisoners from the workhouse to maintain the water service.

From sources other than unions, the answer to the question, whether Government employees have the right to strike, is no. Those who hold this view include, or once did include, President Roosevelt. In current discussion of the question there is frequent repetition of a statement said to have been made by Mr. Roosevelt some years ago: "All Government employees should realize that the process of collective bargaining, as usually understood, cannot be transplanted into the public service. A strike of public employees manifests nothing else than an intent on their part to prevent or obstruct the operations of Government until their demands are satisfied. Such action, looking toward the paralysis of Government, by those who have sworn to support it, is unthinkable and intolerable."

THAT THIS answer by President Roosevelt must necessarily be universal can be suggested by a simple consideration of analogies. If sanitation service employees, and water service employees, can strike, as in fact they have, why not firemen? If firemen, why not policemen? If policemen, why not soldiers?

It would be thought that, with the President's view on record, his view would be followed by the War Labor Board. If strikes by employees of Government are beyond the pale of law, the War Labor Board would be expected to treat such a strike as an outlawed thing. The War Labor Board as such has not taken any completely formal jurisdiction over the Newark strike—the board's hearing for December 9 is announced to be for the purpose of deciding whether or not it shall take jurisdiction. But the board has certainly taken notice of the Newark strike, and, through its subordinates, condoned it.

When the board, last month, took notice of the Newark strike, it turned the case over to what is called a "panel" of three subordinates. This fact-finding panel, by a 2-to-1 majority, issued a formal report and recommendations. About the central question, the fact-finding panel guardedly said: "The fact-finding panel is fully aware of the fact that various legal issues cluster about the problem of the relation of employee unions and governmental bodies. These issues lie outside the scope of the report."

Yet the Labor Board panel, having taken that guardedly position, proceeded to condone the strike, at least. In its report, it recommended that the Labor Board direct the City of Newark to reinstate employees who had taken part in the strike, and that the city "be directed to recognize" the union.

Tunisian War Tumult Disturbs Fabled Isle of Lotus Eaters

North Africa's war, slicing back through history and prehistory, is coming close to the fabled "Land of the Lotus Eaters," says a National Geographic Society bulletin. It is the flat, fertile island of Djerba, which lies at the south end of the Gulf of Gabes off the southern Tunisian shore. The rolling thunder of the big guns near Gabes and Zarzis on the mainland is in strange contrast to the pastoral peace of the island whose 80,000 Berbers have been called the "Quakers of Islam." The island is insulated from the gathering troops of the Allies and the Axis by two narrow straits of shallow water.

Roughly 16 miles square, Djerba holds the distinction of being the largest island of the entire 2600-mile sweep of Africa's Mediterranean coast. Although there are many hundreds of islands in the Mediterranean, all but a score are in the northern waters—mostly in the Aegean Sea. Aside from Djerba and Kerkennah to the north opposite Sfax, the African coast islands earn chart mention principally as hazards to navigation.

Life's pace is easy on the lotus island of Djerba. Fruit farming and sponge fishing are the industries. There are more than two million trees on the island, palms fringing the shores, and groves of olive, fig and citrus covering much of the land. Vineyards and small gardens are everywhere. The young and restless Djerban emigrants, but usually return as a contented Djerban to farm or fish. Legend has it that Ulysses' sailors, sent ashore for water, ate of the lotus, became enchanted, and forgot when it was time to go home.

Part of the French protectorate of Tunisia, Djerba is reached by ferry from Gabes and Zarzis. Its waters are so shallow that it is almost unapproachable for four hours at low tide. Despite the difficulties of approach, large exports of olive oil and dates are shipped from the island's market town of Houmt Souk on the north coast. A sponge market is busy each year from November until March. On the south shore the small settlement at Guellala is famous for its graceful pottery.

Djerba's wealth of color has long attracted tourist comment. The white buildings and bright clothes of natives in Houmt Souk suggest perpetual pageantry. Flaming hibiscus and field flowers are everywhere in the countryside. Fishing-boat sails, gaily colored in every hue of the rainbow, punctuate the blues of sea and sky.

—News Item.

"Farewell!" exclaimed old Boss, the cow.

"I'll now be leaving you."

"It breaks my heart to do it but there's nothing else to do."

"My milk you'll have to do without."

"And get but little cheese."

"Less butter you will have to take."

"You will excuse it, please!"

"The fighters want my products now."

"They want all I can give."

"And in the end they'll get me, too."

"They must have beef to live."

This bovine, long so placid, now assumed a hard-boiled look.

"And did it the commando way."

In splashing through a brook, the "moo" from her then disappeared.

She seemed a different cow.

And, pawing at the pastures, she gave forth a piercing

"Yow-w-w-w!"

Bess sternly eyed a clover and with manner bold and rude

Yelled, "Just make mine a keg of nails."

"I'm through with baby food!"

A cowbird, long a trusted friend, then lit upon her hide.

She bellowed, "Scram!" so roughly, that

The little birdie died.

The fleas at play about her flanks had been quite blithe and gay.

Now, suddenly they staggered, blanched

And slowly fell away.

Her tail she did not deign to use—

No single flick she took

To rout the horde of insects, for she froze 'em with one look!

The herd boy came to take her home

But soon he was in flight

As Bessie bade him, "Call me Slugs!"

And, lissen, nanna fight?"

The farmer next came running down

Demanding, "What is this?"

He took one peek into her eyes

Then signed an armistice!

Then Bessie charged a motor truck

(It was a distance punt):

To prove that she was opening a farflung second front.

The neighbors came from miles around

And came with the police:

Bess gored a dozen police cars—

And turned down pleas for peace!

Oh, such a cow you never saw!

Her feet now seemed to clank

And she began to imitate

A ten-ton Army tank.

Nobody could explain the scene

Till Wickard came, that way

And said, "The cow is in the war—"

"I put her in I-A."

The farmer's wife had heard the row

And from the farmhouse she Observed the cow blitze two great bulls

And then smash number three.

The Gallup Poll

Government Policy Toward Labor Unions Disapproved by 63% of American Public

By George Gallup

Director, American Institute of Public Opinion

Princeton, N. J., Nov. 24.—With a greatly increased Republican representation in the new Congress which will convene in early January, legislation to control labor unions is certain to arise.

Two recent studies conducted by the Institute—one just before the elections and one just after—shed light on important aspects of this problem.

In a study made during the campaign, the Institute attempted to discover to what extent the public favored the Administration's labor policy.

Institute field reporters throughout the Nation asked, in cross-section which of several issues—conduct of the war, government economy, price control, labor unions regulation, and taxes—they would like to see discussed.

Highest on the list was price control, which has already received much attention. Next highest came labor unions regulation.

Of those people interested in the issue of labor unions regulation, the following question was asked:

"Do you approve or disapprove of the Government's policy with regard to labor unions regulations?"

Answers lined up this way:

DISAPPROVE 63%
NO OPINION 6%

No other issue received such a high vote of disapproval.

Gas-Engine Warfare

By Paul Schubert

Test Of Strength In Tunisia

THE American-British offensive in North Africa is having its first decisive trial of strength in Northeast Tunisia, in the Bizerte-Tunis area. At stake is the control of the narrow strip of blue Mediterranean between Tunisia and Sicily. In our control, that strip means a Mediterranean sea route to our East-West seaborne traffic, which means in turn a tremendously strengthened Middle East and a tremendously strengthened India.

Important as this is, there are several other things at stake in North Africa which have almost equal bearing upon the war's grand strategy. One is the effect upon our power to make war, of gaining control of the string of strategic airbases along the full length of the Mediterranean Coast of North Africa. In its influence upon the east-west movement of our air power and of our air-borne transport, the mastery of these airbases is just about as important as the mastery of the Mediterranean itself.

APART from the east-west strength factor, however, the north-south factor of military movement, both sea-borne and air-borne, will have major influence upon our strategy. Tunisia itself juts into the Mediterranean toward Sicily to form a natural bridgehead for movement into the European continent—a pathway straight toward Axis weakness.

Small wonder the Axis has spared no effort to concentrate the most powerful defense in Tunisia that could be gotten there in the short time available. Our new offensive demonstrates all over again the outstanding role played by the gasoline engine in modern offensive warfare.

For several centuries the most effective engine for harnessing mechanical attack-power in concentrated form was the gun. The gun converted the energy locked up in gun powder into the destructive force of flying metal. Battles were won by "fire power"—the soldier strove to concentrate more and larger guns than the enemy had on any given front, and to fire them faster and over a longer period of time.

As a means of harnessing energy in a small, readily transportable engine, the gasoline engine is the gun's first serious rival. The gasoline engine has not replaced the gun. It has given the soldier a new weapon, and one that is proving far more versatile than the gun, since it can be used not only to deliver explosive projectiles on the enemy's position, but also as an engine of high-speed self-propelled mobility.

Our offensive in North Africa is using the gasoline engine in four distinct ways. (1) In the form of air power at the combat front. (2) In the form of air power behind the enemy front, by sending flying gasoline engines (airplanes) to bomb key bases such as Genoa and Turin on the enemy's line of supply. (3) In the form of armored mobile fighting forces (tanks and mobile guns) at the combat front. (4) For rapid transport (by highway and air) between our advance supply bases and the fighting front.

All four of these methods of using the gasoline engine are indispensable to the success of our offensive. The enemy is likewise using all four as best he can in defense of his position. It has, indeed, become an axiom of modern war that successful offensive action is impossible without a great variety of gasoline engines as well as a great variety of guns.

Think what this means. To attack with a gun, you must not only get the gun to the front, but must keep it supplied with ammunition and with a crew to load, aim and fire it. To attack with a gasoline engine, you must not only get the engine to the front—in the form of a tank, or a jeep, or a motor truck, or a mobile gun, or a fighter aircraft, or a bomber... more than that, you must provide the engine with fuel, and with service facilities, and with a crew not only to drive it, but to service it and keep it functioning.

To draw an analogy, we depend upon some 30 million motor cars for rapid individual transport in this country. But the motor cars themselves are only a part of it. Unless they have roads to run on, a universal network of gas pumps and service stations to supply fuel, and a driver for each car, there is no transport system.

Gas engine warfare is similarly dependent upon service facilities and fuel, on roads and runways, airbases and garages. When it is said that possession of North Africa will make possible shuttle bombing flights across Europe between North Africa and England—that will be true, but only after we have adequate airbase facilities in North Africa to match those in England.

In particular, the question of fuel supply is a key factor of gas engine warfare. For us, the movement of gasoline means ships. There can be no large-scale bombing, no large-scale tank attacks in Europe, without ships. Hitler knows that. Hence the German submarine—and hence the inextricable way in which sea power, land power and air power are all bound up together, all dependent upon each other in this total war. No one of the three "services" the others, yet no one of the three is independent of the others.

Fuel is equally important to the Axis, as a limiting factor of gas engine warfare. For them, too, ships, but the production of the fuel itself, is the number one problem.

We can expect fierce U-boat warfare in the Atlantic approaches to the Mediterranean, equally fierce attacks by our side on the Axis fuel manufacturing and storage depots. These behind-the-front battles are all a part of today's gas-engine warfare. Each drop of gasoline is a bullet for the fighting of 1942.

Is Japan On Way Out?

By Marshall Andrews

Navy Losses A Clew

Before its results were known, Americans were cautioned against considering the Battle of Guadalcanal a decisive battle.

Now that its results are known the question inevitably comes up again: Was Guadalcanal a decisive battle? That question can be answered by another.

What is a decisive battle? Is it one which ends a war? Is it one from which one side never recovers and thus decidedly affects the course of a war?

Gettysburg is regarded as a decisive battle, yet the American Civil War continued for 21 months after Lee fell back from the fiasco of Pennsylvania hills he had not stubbornly attacked. Chickamauga was yet to be lost by the Union and Grant's bloody wilderness campaign was still ahead. Gettysburg is regarded as decisive because with that battle the offensive power of the South steadily declined.

Japanese Gettysburg? As a battle from which the South never recovered, Gettysburg was decisive. The same thing may be true of Guadalcanal.

Secretary of the Navy Knox has said it is "very unlikely" the Japanese are now getting reinforcements to their people on the island. If that is true it is because the Allies have command of the sea in the southeastern Solomons, which means the Allies for the time at least hold the initiative in that area.

It has been held that Midway was the decisive battle of the Pacific because it halted for all time any full-scale Japanese attack on Hawaii and the West Coast of the United States. To accept that conclusion one must accept the unlikely premise that Japan had the resources in men and materiel to hold her gains in China, the East Indies, Malaya and Burma and at the same time mount an offensive of important proportions all the way across the Pacific.

Most likely the answer to the decisiveness of the Battle of Guadalcanal, the sea fight of November 13-15, lies in the real seriousness of the damage suffered by the Japanese Navy in that battle. At least 28 Japanese warships, transports and cargo vessels were sunk and an unknown number damaged. If these losses, added to those already suffered by the Japanese in the extensive fighting throughout the South Pacific, crippled her Navy beyond the possibility of immediately resuming the initiative, Guadalcanal most certainly may be considered decisive.

For the recuperative power of America, expressed in resources of manpower and productive capacity for aircraft and ships, is infinitely superior to that of Japan. If Guadalcanal has permitted the Allies to seize the initiative in the South Pacific, it is reasonable to expect they can hold it.

Guadalcanal may have been Japan's Gettysburg. That battle, fought in the hot tropic nights by the blaze of ships' guns at almost pointblank range, may have been the high tide of Japanese conquest.

If that is true, if Guadalcanal shattered Japanese sea power that her fleets must now be conserved for defensive fighting, then Guadalcanal was decisive.

And the tide of battle soon will begin rolling northward.

Hemisphere Defense

By Ernest Lindley

Ecuador Collaborated Effectively

IN FOLLOWING the spectacular and momentous events on distant battle fields, it is easy to overlook the solid contributions to the common interest made by some of our closer neighbors. A case in point is Ecuador, whose president, Don Carlos Alberto Arroyo del Rio, is now visiting the United States.

Ecuador is the smallest and least populous of the nations on the west coast of South America. But in some respects it is the most important to the defense of the Western Hemisphere both because of its location on the western bulge of South America and because it owns the Galapagos Islands, which are sometimes referred to as the Pacific key to the Panama Canal. Its position is comparable by some ways to Brazil's on the Atlantic side and, in other ways, to that of the West Indies.

Fortunately, Ecuador, under President Arroyo, has collaborated promptly and effectively in the defense of the Western Hemisphere. Ecuador approved and carried out the recommendations of the Inter-American Conference in Rio, following Pearl Harbor, that all the nations of the Western Hemisphere sever diplomatic relations with the Axis. And, at the same time, Ecuador supplied concrete assistance to the protection of the Western Hemisphere by agreeing to lease to us the site for a base at Santa Elena. This was followed a few months later by an agreement giving our armed forces access to the Galapagos Islands. Both arrangements are temporary—for the duration of the war.

BUT by these arrangements Ecuador became the first of the South American nations to agree to this form of defensive military collaboration. Subsequently, comparable arrangements were made with Brazil and Mexico. The attitude of Ecuador contrasts notably with that of Chile, which was intimidated by threats of retaliation, and even yet has not broken diplomatic relations with the Axis powers. Ecuador is within closer reach of the protecting arm of American naval and air power. But Ecuador made her choice in the dark days immediately after Pearl Harbor, and in spite of intensive Axis-inspired pressure on President Arroyo.

Little is heard about the measures taken by our Joint Chiefs of Staff to provide for the defense of this region of the Pacific. But last spring they created a separate Southeast Pacific Area, comprising all the Pacific waters east of a line drawn south from the neighborhood of the Mexico-Guatemala border. This embraces the western approaches to all of Central and South America and the Panama Canal. Owing to our naval victories in the Pacific, it now seems extremely improbable that the Japanese will ever break into that area, except with submarines and possibly a stray surface raider. But when Ecuador joined hands with us, the danger was less remote.

THE SECURITY of the Galapagos Islands, in particular, has long been a source of concern to our Navy and Army, even before the Panama Canal was completed. These islands lie about 1100 miles southwest of the Gulf of Panama, about the same distance that the Virgin Islands lie to its east. They comprise five large islands and 10 or more smaller ones, with a total area about equal to Delaware's. They offer sheltered waters for a fleet and ground for an air force. Or, if not carefully watched and protected, they might become secret fueling bases for enemy submarines and raiders. They are the only important islands covering at fairly close range the western approach to the canal and the trade routes between North America and the west coast of South America.

There were negotiations with Ecuador concerning the Galapagos in the nineties, and again shortly after the turn of the century. In 1909, proposals were made to sell the islands to the United States, and two years later there were discussions concerning a 99-year lease, for which we were to pay 15 million dollars. Ecuador blocked the deal. Ecuadorian feelings concerning these islands became so sensitive that during the first World War the government prevented a steamship from clearing a mainland port with supplies for a commercial enterprise on the Galapagos in which American capital, along with Ecuadorian, was interested. And in 1917, a report that the government was about to sell the islands to the United States or to American interests was a major weapon in a successful revolution.

Fighting now to preserve the way of life that made it great in the flaring fires of industries, abundance from farms, the richness of landscapes and spiritual strength of people, America gives thanks to God tomorrow in the time-tried way of its Pilgrims.

From the fat of the land now pouring its strength into the shallow larders of our Allies abroad Americans yesterday still drew to their own tables turkey, celery, cranberries, pumpkins for pie, fruit and mincemeats at prices a typical grocer said were "just about the same as last year."

"Here is good turkey," he said, "for 49 cents a pound. It was about 47 cents last Thanksgiving here." The OPA estimated that a good turkey would cost $6.

The other things which made the American Thanksgiving table the envy of hungry men throughout the world were available yesterday—when the menus were planned. The Agriculture Department said:

The cranberry crop is larger, some 785,000 barrels this year as against 725,000 barrels last year and a 603,000-barrel average during the preceding 10 years. Turkeys are as plentiful as last year but may be short in some defense areas—not Washington. But there other poultry was expected to be available. The supply of celery equals last year's; there is plenty of bread for stuffings, enough pumpkins and fresh fruit and, somehow, bananas arrived last week. Available, in some plenty, were spices, but these will disappear, it was predicted.

There was food for all who could buy.

Fear Panama 'Treaty' Bypasses Constitution

ONE OF THE MOST significant treaties since the founding fathers wrote the Constitution is now under secret consideration in the United States Senate. It is an agreement with Panama.

Actually it is not called a "treaty." It is called a "joint resolution" to escape the constitutional provision requiring two-thirds ratification by the Senate. In other words, this particular treaty, when called a joint resolution, can be ratified by a bare majority vote of one in each house of Congress.

So far eagle-eyed Senators Gillette, Democrat of Iowa, and Nye, Republican of North Dakota, comprising a subcommittee to study the matter, have not recommended passage. They are skeptical regarding any breakdown of constitutional safeguards.

The treaty provides that:

1. Panama be given the entire sewage, water supply and sanitation system constructed by the United States in the cities of Colon and Panama to get rid of dread yellow fever and malaria menace. But after giving them to Panama for its own operation, the United States would still retain the obligation to maintain health in the Canal Zone.
2. Gives Panama all United States-owned land in the city of Colon, valued at 25 million dollars.
3. Cancels the $2,500,000 debt which Panama borrowed from the Export-Import Bank.

DREW PEARSON

Panama Congress Must Ratify

ANOTHER "TREATY" also has been negotiated with Panama which has not been referred to Congress even as a joint resolution. This is called a military agreement. Undoubtedly, there is justification for rushing through an agreement of this kind for the defense of Panama. But although the United States Senate is not consulted and not asked to ratify the agreement, nevertheless the Congress of Panama, under Article 14, must ratify. In other words, the State Department considers the Congress of Panama more important than the Senate of the United States.

This military agreement provides for (1) $700,000 a year rent to Panama during the war for the occupation of certain areas in the Republic; (2) Building roads through Panama which become the property of Panama after the war; (3) Building a bridge over a major river which becomes the property of Panama; (4) Building bridges over or subways under each end of the Panama Canal.

Senators studying these two agreements point out that the treaty of 1903 negotiated by Secretary of State John Hay, permitted the United States to use the territory of Panama at any time for the defense of the Canal. And while they are behind the Good Neighbor Policy, Senators doubt whether a real good neighbor policy should be purchased for approximately 50 million dollars in cash. As a result, the "treaty" submitted as a "joint resolution" may not get a majority vote.

Rationing Mrs. Henderson

THE RATIONING programs of the OPA are complicating the life of Mrs. Leon Henderson. First she ran out of sugar, then she lost her ration book, and now she has trouble at the filling station.

Just before the deadline last week, she took the Henderson car and the "A" book to get the last 4 gallons of gas. The attendant looked at the license plate. (There has been gas bootlegging in Washington, and Leon Henderson has ordered strict compliance with rules.)

Upon Mrs. Leon Henderson the attendant fixed a cold eye.

"What kind of funny business is this?" he demanded.

"What's the matter?" said lovely Merle Henderson, somewhat flustered.

"You got somebody else's book," MRS. HENDERSON he declared. "The numbers don't match."

"Why that's impossible," she retorted, "I wouldn't do that! I'm Mrs. Leon Henderson."

"Lady, I can't help it if you're Mrs. Roosevelt—the numbers don't match."

And he was right. It seems that when the Henderson car was registered, the engine number was forced in the place intended for the license number, and the error had never been discovered.

She finally got her 4 gallons of gas, but that evening she said to Leon, "Of all the people in the United States, I believe I am the chief victim of rationing!"

Hitler Influences Argentina

IF HITLER moves in on Spain, he may accomplish at one blow what we have failed to do in nine months of diplomatic discussions with Argentina. He may force that South American country into a break with the Axis.

It was Argentina which principally gummed the works at Rio de Janeiro last January, when astute Sumner Welles, Undersecretary of State, was trying to line up all 21 Latin-American countries behind a resolution to break relations.

There Argentina Foreign Minister Ruiz Guinazu insisted on "neutrality" and Argentina remained on the fence.

Ruiz Guinazu is a great admirer of Spain, is proud of his own Spanish blood. Furthermore, he points to Spain's "tradition of neutrality" as the best guarantee of peace.

So if the Germans now attack Spain, the Argentine government would almost be forced to come to the defense of the mother country by breaking relations with the attacking country.

NOTE: Resignation of Argentine War Minister Tonazzi, a friend of the United States, is regarded as the first important rift in the Castillo government.

This Morning

With Shirley Potich

It's going to be tough to work up a case of bleeding-heart for big league baseball which is threatened with the loss of most of its luxuries next season. Baseball is lucky to be escaping with its life, and the club owners probably know it.

Big league ball players have been the most pampered individuals on the payroll of any sport. Their dough and their hours have been wonderful. On the road, they have been insured to valet service. Club secretaries to buy their train tickets, reserve their Pullman berths, order their taxicabs and make their hotel reservations. Private cars where they could smoke, play cards and no worry about their state of dress, or undress.

There'll be some changes made next season. The ball players will have to ride the day coaches like ordinary mortals. They will even have to wait their turn for a taxicab instead of being greeted by a special fleet that would take them to ball park or hotel. The second cup of coffee in the diners is out. One thing will be static: The time tip, which is the badge of the ball player.

Transportation poses a real problem for baseball, but not an insurmountable one. The game is going to get acquainted with the day coaches after all these years in the Pullmans. The transition may be hard, but hardly pitiable. Time was when the ball players never knew the luxuries of a Pullman. Clark Griffith recalls 'em.

"In my early days as a ball player, we rode the day coaches and liked it," says Griffith. "There wasn't any grumbling. The only fellow who was apt to get a berth to sleep in was the pitcher who was going to work the next day. We walked to our hotel and the ball parks, and usually we had to lug our uniforms and at least a couple of bats. Nowadays, the players don't see their uniforms or bats from one town to another, until the stuff pops up in the ball park locker room like magic. They've been getting great service they never appreciated."

It won't be such a whopping change, though, for a lot of the ball players who will be in the majors next season. A good share of 'em will be out of the minors, where they've been riding the buses and doting on the blue plate specials. They have never tasted big league fare, and perhaps won't miss it, though they'll hear, regretfully no doubt, of "the good old days" when a ball player deserved some consideration from the railroad, taxicab and hotel trade.

The baseball business is in a pretty good spot, though. As yet there is no indication that it isn't going to be permitted to survive the war. President Roosevelt, himself, gave the nod to the game, and until the President reverses himself, baseball need ask no questions. It is on the assumption that the White House blessings still hold good, that the majors are holding their annual meeting at Chicago next month to lay plans for 1943.

Things will be different in the South. Scarcely a club knows for sure where it is going to train. The Nats have a contract to return to Orlando, Fla., but their hotel has been appropriated by the United States Army Air Force. The Cincinnati Reds have hotel accommodations, as usual, at their Tampa base, but their Tampa ball field has been taken over by the Army. The clubs who trained in Miami, are out of luck in that spot. Too much Army activity.

At best, the teams in the South can play only a skeleton spring training schedule. Those train-hops up and down Florida are out. A 30-mile jump, once a breeze for a party of 40 ball players, has become a problem. At that, the club owners may scarcely care. The spring games have always been over-rated as a conditioning medium. Their chief value was the publicity they commanded.

It's not even certain that big league baseball has suffered from the war, beyond the unimportant little inconveniences like the loss of travel luxuries. Thus far, the war seems to have been kind to the game, aside from the White House blessing. The military draft and enlistments have relieved the club owners from hefty payrolls. When the Nats lost Cecil Travis and Buddy Lewis to the Army, they were relieved of the two heaviest salaries on the club.

When Ted Williams was lost to the Red Sox, the Boston club got out from under a $30,000 salary. Of course, their argument is that the Red Sox would be more profitable with Williams around, but with all clubs losing high-paid stars, with everything being sort of relative and baseball continuing sans a lot of those big salaries, the club owners figure to do all right. The customers don't care a whoop whether it's Williams or some $4000-a-year former minor leaguer who breaks up a ball game for 'em, if it's in their favor. Somehow, baseball will struggle along, it seems.

On the Line

With CONSIDINE

New York, Nov. 24.—"It's just like a fellow said to me," Jimmy Conzelmann, raconteur coach of the Chicago Cardinals, explained midway in his speech to the New York Football Writers.

"He said, 'Jim, you're in a tough spot. You can't coach well enough to coach and can't write well enough to write. You should write sports books for boys. They won't know you don't know enough football, and they'll be too dumb to know you can't write.'"

Of course, he was kidding. Jimmy usually is, except when his team goes on the field. Then he's as serious as he was in his now famed commencement address on the value of body-contact sports in the scheme of war.

This was his third appearance before the Grid Writers. He has been their favorite speaker since the first time he appeared. Then he rose to his feet, in his serious way, and got off to one of the finest catapulting starts in the history of luncheon speaking. On that memorable occasion, Conzelmann began, "I have just had a light breakfast of a double diaphragm and a shot of morphine."

He had a card filled with pencilled notes, the other day. "This isn't what I'm going to say," he remarked, after studying it. "It's a list of things I said the other times. I don't want to repeat myself."

He had also marked on the card a notation not to give his commencement address. "I've given it so many times under so many different titles that I have no more shame," he confessed. "Last week I spoke in a place called Jonesville and I called it 'Early Jonesville, or the Rise and Fall of the Buggy-Wheel Industry.'"

Jim has a favorite coach—Lieut. Comdr. George Halas of the Bears. "I told you a year ago that he was the best coach in the business," he reminded. "I see no reason to change that. I never get over marveling at Halas. A lot of guys want to be wealthy; and a lot of other guys want to own the Bears. He's both. Maybe some of you think I've gone out of my way in past years to point out that George is tight. That's not so. All I said was that he has bought the next two lots to the Fort Knox Gold Arsenal. He's training now in Oklahoma."

"Oklahoma was about the last State admitted to the Union, but it'll only be the second State George has taken. I saw him in his uniform before he left. He was a little bulky here and there. You'd think he'd keep some of that money in the bank."

Jimmy knows them all and kids them all. "I was talking to George Marshall last week in Washington. . . . No, you'd better change that to Marshall was talking to me. Marshall gave me a lot of advice. He said that the thing that built pro football in Washington was that he gave the folks a show. . . . Good vaudeville between halves, colorful uniform for the band, and so on. I told him, 'Listen, if I had Sammy Baugh on my team I could draw a crowd playing a banjo between halves.'"

The Cards aren't too hot this year. Conzelmann says he had the makings of a pretty good line, but it was so weak that three of the boys sprained their backs recently in a neighborhood taffy pull. He's had some sympathy, however. "A fellow came up to me after we had lost a tough one, 38-2, and he said, 'Jimmy, don't feel downhearted. It's not your fault. Your boys can't play well this year because of the war. Their minds are taken up with the war.'"

"I seized on that with pathetic eagerness," Jimmy confessed. "Whenever anybody would confront me with my bad record after that, I'd simply shrug and murmur, 'c'est la guerre, c'est la guerre.' Unfortunately Charles Bidwell, the man I work for, doesn't understand French."

Jimmy says the greatest trend in football this year is coaches with freshly dated cardiograph readings. "I don't know what's come over us," he said. "Halas was never sick, when he was poor. I read for days about Greasy Neale's physical condition. I've known him a long time and didn't even know he had one. Finally it all drove me to a doctor. He looked me over and drew a chart of where my heart was, and if it's where he says it is, I ought to go back to my college anatomy teacher and demand my dough back. It's about where a third chin would be on a fat man. I've been afraid to tie my necktie very tight ever since then. But he has been encouraging news, at that. The doc said, 'I guess you're all right. Just take off a little weight, and play your secondary a little looser.'"

Navy Guards Against Ticket 'Ringers'

10-Mile Rule For Requests Enforced

Academy Checks On All Addresses Of Applicants For 20,000 Seats

By Pete Zurlinden

Associated Press Staff Writer

Annapolis, Nov. 24.—Somebody had better put an okay on the Navy football coach and his players or there is going to be one side missing when the Army shows up for the forty-third service tussle Saturday.

So saith "Chief Ticket Detective" Morris Gilmore and he—better known as Lieutenant Commander Gilmore, treasurer of the Navy Athletic Association—is the man who has the say-so.

"I'm still holding Comdr. John Wheelchel's tickets for the varsity squad," Gilmore said. "He sent in the application all right—but he forgot to sign it and he's not getting the ducks until he comes over here and signs for them. Rules are rules."

Gives Some Idea

Which gives you some idea about how tough it is to be among the 20,000 expected to see Saturday's "semiprivate" game, when Midshipmen will cheer for Army (the Cadets can't come) and the Army mule will be one recruited from within the 10-mile eligibility zone.

Although 20,000 isn't much of a crowd, judged by peacetime standards, accept the word of Gilmore that's plenty when questions like these must be asked:

"Are you a resident of a 10-mile radius of the Maryland Statehouse? Navy Athletic Association member? Member of the Severn River Naval Command? Midshipman?"

Guard Against "Ringers"

Personal telephone calls, checks with postal authorities and similar steps have been taken to make certain there won't be any "ringers" in Saturday's crowd, and tickets have been refused to persons who gave business addresses instead of residential addresses.

The problem of checking eligibility for tickets to the classic developed after President Roosevelt shifted the game from Philadelphia to Annapolis and placed restrictions upon attendance.

More than 10,000 tickets have been mailed, and applications will be accepted until Friday.

Army Varsity Gets Taste of Middies' Plays in Skirmish

West Point, N. Y., Nov. 24.—Army's football squad, at top physical condition for the third straight week, held its first hard practice for the Navy game today, scrimmaging against the junior varsity, which ran plays from Navy formations.

Despite the 3-1 odds in favor of Army, Coach Earl Blaik declared today that Navy definitely was in the better psychological spot. He pointed out that the Middies have come very fast, now have their seasoned players in the first line-up and will have had two weeks to get ready for the annual classic, scheduled Saturday at Annapolis.

Picking (?) the Winners:

Week to Decide 5, Perhaps 6, Of Country's Grid Crowns

Southwest, Big Six, Southern, Southeast Big Seven and Pacific Coast Titles on Block

By Edward W. Cochrane

New York, Nov. 24.—Five of the six undecided conference football championships of America definitely will be settled and the sixth may be determined as a result of games Thursday and Saturday which virtually will drop the curtain on the college pastime for 1942.

The five to be determined will be in the Southwest, Big Six, Southern, Southeast and Big Seven. It is possible that the Pacific Coast race will be finished. Ohio State already has won in the Big Ten and Tulsa in the Missouri Valley.

Interest centers on two games, both to be played Saturday. In one, Boston College definitely will clinch its claim to Eastern supremacy if it beats Holy Cross and thus will be chosen for a game in the Sugar Bowl at New Orleans on New Year's Day. In the other, Georgia Tech and Georgia will clash at Athens to decide two things—the championship of the Southeast Conference and the right to go to Pasadena to play the Pacific Coast Conference champion in the Rose Bowl.

Bulldogs on Bottom

Having lost to Auburn, Georgia now becomes the underdog in its battle with its old rival from Atlanta. Georgia is in the enviable position of having nothing to lose and much to gain, while Tech has an undefeated and untied record—the only one left in that section and one of the three in the United States.

Thus Georgia will go into this battle fighting mad in the hope that it can bring its arch enemy of years standing down on even terms with it for the Conference crown and possibly spoil a trip to Pasadena for the Engineers.

There is little doubt that Georgia would have gone to the Rose Bowl if it had whipped Auburn and Tech as it was favored by the Pacific Coast committee, but unless Georgia can beat Bill Alexander's team there is no chance for such an invitation to be received by Georgia now.

Trip For a Victory

On the other hand a victory for Tech will almost assure that team a trip to California for the classic. This will be a battle between the Senior Sinkwich and the Freshman Castleberry. Don't be shocked if Sinkwich & Co. bounce back and win, although I'm picking Tech because when the chips are down Alexander is hard to whip if he has the material.

'Pepper' Martin Reported New Rochester Pilot

By the Associated Press

St. Louis, Nov. 24.—A report the St. Louis Cardinals will send Pepper Martin to Rochester as manager of their International League Farm Club was published today in the Sporting News.

However, Sam Breadon, president of the Cardinals, had "no comment" on the report.

Martin, one of the most colorful players in baseball during a dozen years of service with the Cardinals, was made the manager of their Sacramento Farm Club in 1941. His team won the Pacific Coast League pennant this past season.

Rochester, which finished last in the International League, had three managers during the year, Tony Kaufmann, Estel Crabtree and Ray Hayworth.

Tech-Central Contest to Be Broadcast

A Tech grad of 17 years ago, realizing the interest in tomorrow's championship football scrap between Tech and Central High, yesterday agreed to sponsor a play-by-play description of the Central Stadium battle.

Pat Regal, local clothing merchant, who played football with the Manual Trainers back when radio broadcasts were rare, announced he would air the game over Station WWDC. The station's regular announcer, Ray Carson, will handle the microphone at 2:30 and continuing as long as play lasts.

Big-Time Atmosphere

Thus a big-time atmosphere will be given a meeting which is attracting more widespread attention than any public school game in years. What with no college attractions on the schedule and considering the even status of the teams a capacity crowd is almost assured in Central's big bowl.

Meanwhile at Tech, which is seeking to reverse an earlier setback at the hands of the Vikings, yesterday's muddy underfooting caused no grief. While Coach John Clary kept his eye on the squad, Center John Harvil expressed the Trainer's sentiments. Tackle George Paul agreed readily.

"In this mud their passes won't be worth a darn," blond John opined, "and our line will really count. That's what we're proud of—our line. Our backs are very good, though not plentiful enough. But our line . . ."

At yesterday's drill the starting line averaged 175 pounds. That wasn't nearly as heavy as Tech forward walls in the past, but it is probably twice as fast.

For the first time this season most of the squad's injuries have healed. Ankle injuries sustained by Dan O'Connell, burly back; Jack Gray, end, and Sonny Morrisette, kicking and running star, were the most persistent. Morrisette still is bothered by a sore neck but is ready to play. And "Monk" Bauers, the tiny back whose cracked ribs kept him out of the first Central game, is back in good shape.

Columbus Boxer, After Draw Earlier, Ends Feature Scrap In Impressive Style

By Al Costello

Post Staff Writer

Their last fight was a draw, but Jack Buddy Walker, Columbus, Ohio, Negro, wasn't in a mood to trust the judges last night at Uline's Arena so he knocked out Corpl. Buddy Knox, a Dayton soldier at Bolling Field in 2:14 of the fourth round of their scheduled 10-rounder. A whistling right to the tummy put out the lights.

A crowd of 1,300, which paid $1781, wondered how Knox ever managed to earn a draw with the Columbus battler as Walker outclassed the corporal thoroughly from the very first bell.

In the first round they merely felt each other out, with honors just about even.

But once the bell rang for the second stanza, Walker took command, hammering Buddy on several occasions with hard rights and lefts to the head which were obviously felt. The third round was much like the second, with Walker constantly getting his punches off first, following them with body pokes which, too, began taking their toll.

And Now Comes the End

The fourth heat brought the finish, with Walker setting up Knox for the business by stabbing Buddy successfully with left hands and pumping rights to the face. Knox was coming in and getting ready to let fly when the Negro crossed him, brought up the terrific right and that was that.

Buddy hit the canvas, writhing and rolling. His mouthpiece, which dropped from his soggy jaws, popping onto the canvas. There wasn't much need for Referee Eddie LaFond to count but he did as a formality. Walker weighed 191 and Knox 181½.

The hit of the show resulted in the scheduled 6-round semi-final when Earl Lowman, the Negro "one man gang" from New York, knocked out K. O. Horace Thompson, of the United States Navy in 55 seconds of the fifth.

Down Three Times

The "one man gang" had Thompson, knockout winner over Buddy Moore, down for three times in the first; once in the second and twice in the third before administering the coup de grace in the fifth with a hard chop to Horace's ear. Between knockdowns, in the first and third, the "one man gang" continually teased Horace, grimacing, sticking out a ruby tongue and offering his head for a target, which the dazed Thompson couldn't get up quite enough energy to take a shot at. Despite the terrific beating Thompson took without a whimper, he entered a mild objection when Referee LaFond insisted the 10 count found his knee on the floor. And despite the lacing, Thompson several times managed to stagger Lowman. It was a beauty.

Grayson Whips Thomas

Buster Grayson, 169, Baltimore Negro, outpunched Buddy Thomas, 172, of Washington, in the six-round main preliminary. What few of the cleaner punches landed were thrown by the Baltimorean.

Other prelims saw Mike Lockewitch, 178, of Boston outpoint Buck Jones of Baltimore in four; Lee Walker, 175, of Washington, Negro, reversed a four-round decision against his past conqueror, Taylor Miller, 164, former District of Columbia Golden Glover, now of the Army, and Tuffy Cummings, 166, British Navy, repeated his four-round triumph over Tiger Nelson, 140½, New York Negro, in the opener.

Bears Aren't Supermen, Can Be Beaten, Redskins Are Told

Chicago Club Scouted by Bergman

Former C. U. Coach Praises Offensive Of Western Champs; Warns of Lions

By Merrell W. Whitteley

Dutch Bergman, who has seen the Chicago Bears play three times this year and will see them in their last two games in his past-time job of Redskins scout, told the 'Skins yesterday the Bears had a great football team but they were not supermen and could be beaten in the championship game here December 13.

Coach Ray Flaherty gave Bergman the floor at the morning meeting and Dutch, who officiated in the pro league last year and coached at Catholic University until the

Redskin-Bear

Game at 2 P. M.

Redskin officials announced last night that the National pro title play-off game between the Redskins and the Chicago Bears at Griffith Stadium December 13 would start at 2 o'clock, instead of the regular time of 2:30 p. m.

Cards gave up football, gave the 'Skins the lowdown on last week's Bear-Detroit Lion game.

Bergman divided his time between the Bears and the Lions and in a pleading tone of voice he asked the Redskins not to go into the Detroit game Sunday thinking too much of Detroit's horrible record, but to play their usual brand of football as the Lions had a lot of good football players and if they ever clicked they were going to win a ball game.

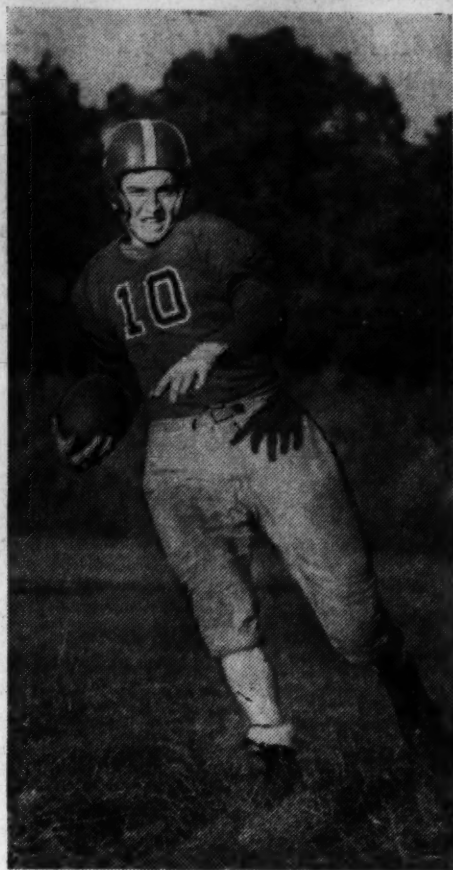

Change of Coaches

The Lions have gone through a change of coaches, they've been down in luck and have been playing every game with a physiological disadvantage. Against the Bears they started passing on first down in the first quarter, got behind and then gave way to far superior reserve strength, although, they are fairly well stocked in backfield replacements but have few for the line.

Concerning the Bears, Bergman told the squad and coaches the club coached by Hunk Anderson and Luke Johnson (in the absence of George Halas) was as good or better than he had ever seen it the last two weeks, and Dutch particularly noticed a tremendous improvement in the play of Ray McLean and Charlie O'Rourke. McLean is the back from St. Anselm's who personally handed one of Bergman's C. A. teams a trouncing when the Cards were unbeaten. They have been playing good,

Baseball Used to Be His Game

Under the urging of his brother, Johnny Fenlon, coach of Richmond University's grid team, young Pat Fenlon (above) is finishing up a successful year of football with the Spiders. Pat was a baseball star at Central High here, played no football whatever. He'll be in evidence tomorrow when the Spiders meet William and Mary in Richmond hard, top-flight football, clicking in every department. They have been handicapped by penalties, but more from the type of football they play than any roughing, kicking or slugging, Dutch went on.

Bergman offered no comparison between the teams. He will see them play the Cleveland Rams next Sunday and the Chicago Cardinals in the season's finale.

Dutch has not seen Bill Osmani play this year and has not been able to pick up any definite information as to whether the former Holy Cross powerhouse, who scored the first touchdown in the 1940 championship game here, would play.

Osmani was hurt early in the season and has been scouting for the Bears since his injury.

Cites Bulldog Turner

Bergman cited Bulldog Turner, the Bear ends and a half-dozen of the Chicagoans' backs for consistently good performances. In talking to Arch Ward, the Chicago sports promoter last week, Ward told Dutch he figured the Bears played their peak game of the season against the Brooklyn Dodgers in a 35-0 rout. Washington beat the same team last week, 23-3, but with two minutes of the first half remaining the score was 3-0 for the Dodgers.

"It should be a great ball game for the championship and your gang can win it," Dutch told Flaherty, and Ray thinks so, too.

Tippy Larkin, Bean Jack to Meet in N. Y.

By the Associated Press

New York, Nov. 24.—Beau Jack, the rapid-fire puncher from Augusta, Ga., and Tippy Larkin of Garfield, N. J., will meet in a 15-round bout in Madison Square Garden December 18 in the main bout of an elimination series to determine a successor to Sammy Angott, who recently relinquished the world lightweight championship.

The New York State Athletic Commission today drew up a list of 11 contenders for the vacated title, listing Beau Jack, recent conqueror of Allie Stolz, and Larkin as the most prominent. The other nine will fight it out in a long series of bouts to eliminate all but one, who will then be matched with the Jack-Larkin victor in a final bout for the championship.

The list including Stolz, who was ranked as leading contender for the title until he was beaten by Beau Jack, Maxie Shapiro of New York and Bob Montgomery of Philadelphia, who will fight in Philadelphia next Tuesday, Chester Rico of New York, Cleo Shans of Los Angeles, Joey Peralta of Tamaqua, Pa.; Luther (Sluggo) White of Baltimore, Willie Joyce of Gary, Ind., and Juan Zurita of Mexico.

Abe J. Greene, National Boxing Association president, attended today's meeting and indicated the N. B. A. will recognize the survivor of the elimination series as champion. Greene said it was a "mutual action," taken to avoid a repetition of the confusion that follows setting up dual champions.

The New York Commissioners pointed out that any bouts between the boxers listed, whether or not they are held in New York, will be regarded as a part of the elimination series.

Bowlers to Roll For Turkeys Today

Alleys will feature a turkey event today from 11 in the morning until closing. The affair is for three games costing $1.69, and a full handicap is allowed on scratch of 128. A turkey will go to high game and set rollers, men and women, and also to man and woman rolling high single game. There will also be a turkey to the man and woman rolling lowest scores, all balls to remain on alley.

The three Hanover-bred horses who triumphed in the Hambletonian were Hanover's Bertha in 1930, Shirley Hanover in 1937 and Bill Gallion in 1941. Shirley Hanover was a daughter of Bertha. Although bred as Ashley Hanover here, Bill Gallion was owned by the R. H. Johnston stables of Charlotte, N. C., at the time of his victory.

Horses owned by Hanover Farms, who scored in the Hambletonian, were Guy McKinney, winner of the first classic in 1926, and McLin Hanover, the 1938 champion.

With the discontinuance of the racing work at the stables, Henry Thomas, chief trainer and driver since 1934, will leave to take up similar duties for the Johnston Stables. Thomas handled Shirley and McLin Hanover in their Hambletonian appearances.

Play-off Tickets Nearly Gone

"We're not selling any tickets over the counter or over the phone, please tell that to the fans," Redskins General Manager Jack Espey said yesterday as he popped his head out of a pile of letters stacked in pyramid fashion on the floor of the Ninth Street office.

Espey and his force had not begun to clear the mail applications for tickets for the championship game with the Bears here December 13, but the office boss estimated the mail was more than three times heavier than Monday's and the 35,741 tickets were about gone.

Applications are being accepted only by mail and with the request accompanied by a money order or certified check. Tickets are $2.20, $3.30 and $4.40, and the limit is four to a person.

Espey also pointed out that there are no more $4.40 tickets except for persons who have their season ticket options and these must be exercised before the Saturday night deadline.

The gate for the championship playoff will be about $100,000 and will be divided under league supervision. The Redskins have already set a home attendance record and for the exhibition game with the Bears, the six home league games and the playoff they will set an all-time record for the number of persons having seen a pro team in a single season at home.

G. W. High's Star Lost for W.-L. Game

Foltz in Navy Uniform; Old Oaken Bucket Series to Be Renewed at 10 a. m. Tomorrow

Special Dispatch to The Post

Alexandria, Va., Nov. 24.—As George Washington High School and Washington and Lee of Arlington completed preparations for their annual Thanksgiving morn battle today, the hopes of the underdog Alexandria eleven dropped with the announcement that Marty Foltz, stellar captain and quarterback, definitely would not be available for the traditional fray.

Foltz, who has sparked the G. W. eleven for the past two years, enlisted in the Coast Guard two weeks ago, but a temporary deferment permitted him to perform against Hopewell High School last week. There was some hope that he would not be called until after the Turkey Day classic.

Just when G. W. supporters' hopes were soaring as the result of his four-touchdown performance against Hopewell, he received his induction notice, and he was in Coast Guard uniform this afternoon as his former teammates ran through their final heavy drill in preparation for the W. and L. tilt. Washington and Lee's classy Generals, who have breezed through eight games without defeat, rate as heavy favorite to romp to their fifth win the modern "Old Oaken Bucket" series, and the announcement of Foltz's loss tends to up the odds on the Arlington gridmen. The closest the Arlingtonians have come to defeat was a 13-12 triumph over Central High, of Washington. In most of their engagements the Generals have won as they pleased.

Although George Washington definitely will take the field in an underdog role, supporters of the Presidents bank their victory hopes on the constant improvement shown by the team since the start of the season, coupled with the traditional belief that "past performances mean nothing" when the two bitter rivals get together.

Washington and Lee was favored to win in a romp last year, but the Generals were able to salvage a 19-19 tie only after a desperate last-minute rally which saw them chalk up two touchdowns in the final four minutes of play.

Despite gasoline rationing and transportation difficulties the contest, slated for 10 a. m. in the Washington and Lee Stadium, is expected to draw a capacity crowd.

Retirement Of Camilli Is Likely

Rickey to Attend Baseball Meeting With Few Hopes Of Replacement

By the Associated Press
San Francisco, Nov. 24.—Dolph Camilli may be playing first base for the Brooklyn Dodgers next spring after all—because Mrs. Hugh Cumming heard an AP item broadcast from a local radio station last night.

Two weeks ago Camilli said he would not return to Brooklyn next year because of the high cost of maintaining his family there, coupled with the fact his 2000-acre cattle ranch near Laytonville needed his attention. He could not get competent help to run the ranch.

Camilli's predicament made news. Mrs. Cumming tuned in on a program. Her husband, now a Richmond shipyard worker, was born and raised on a Montana ranch and wants to get back to cattle raising.

A letter was en route today to Camilli from Cumming.

By the Associated Press
New York, Nov. 24.—Although he insisted that the prospects for trading at the winter baseball meetings in Chicago next week are scant, President Branch Rickey of the Brooklyn Dodgers today disclosed he has been exploring some possible deals.

Manager Jimmy Wilson of the Chicago Cubs conferred with him for two or three hours here yesterday, Rickey said at his weekly press conference, and "we did some casting about."

Rickey did not go into the subject of their conversation in detail, but it was quite possible that they may have considered one of the five first basemen on the Cub's roster as possible replacement for the veteran Dolph Camilli, who has been considering retirement.

Fleets of Protection

The Cubs have Glen Russell, Jimmie Fox, Phil Cavarretta, Ed Wittkus and Heinz Becker all with first-base experience and the Dodgers' need may become desperate even though Rickey said he still had hope of persuading Camilli to return.

Another possibility was that he might obtain a replacement from one of the St. Louis Cardinal farms. "I have gone over the reserve lists of both major leagues and also the American Association trying to find someone who can play for us in the event Camilli does not change his mind," Rickey explained, "and it has not been very productive."

"In fact, I have found only one man whom I think I might lay my hands on. He belongs to the Cardinal organization and I think the price will go up as soon as I show any interest, although he's not a major leaguer at all."

Rickey said he believed that Camilli was sincere in saying that he was unable to obtain help for the operation of his California ranch.

"I know this is a problem, from my personal experience," he said. "I don't think terms would bother us. But I am going to talk to him in a different way than I have needed to do with other ball players."

A Case of Necessity

"In these times baseball needs him, the team needs him. I never have had to beg a player to play baseball, but I am going to try to get Camilli back here another year. If he has been paid acceptably, perhaps generously, in the past, then he may be willing to consider that though he may not need baseball now, baseball needs him."

The possibility that the Dodgers still may have a claim to Edworth (Babe) Dahlgren, who has played first for several major league clubs, was discussed, but Rickey said that he was not interested in him.

Dahlgren was bought from the Cubs last year as a replacement for Camilli, but at the close of the season was first optioned to Montreal and then sent to Indianapolis in a deal for Earl Reid and Joe Bestudik. However, Bestudik has entered military service and there is some question about the status of the deal.

Rickey said that in the major league meetings he would favor keeping the player rosters at 25 men, the present level, and would vote against any increase in the number of night games by any club.

25,000 May See Keydets Battle V.P.I.

Lexington, Va., Nov. 24.—What may be an all-time record football crowd for Virginia is expected to jam Roanoke's new Municipal Stadium when V. M. I. and Virginia Tech return to the magic city for the fortieth renewal of the Thanksgiving Day "Military Classic of the South." Advance estimates indicate the throng, attracted by the prospects of a close game and the colorful pagentry of the schools' cadet corps, may exceed 25,000.

As usual, a flip of a coin is as good a way as any to forecast the outcome of the game. The Tech-men, beaten only twice this year, will be favored to gain their first victory over the Cadets since 1937, but records of the series dating back to 1894 show that as often as not the underdog has come out on top. Nevertheless, V. P. I.'s impressive season, high-lighted by a tie with Kentucky, makes them look the better team when compared with the Fighting Squadron's mid-season collapse that resulted in resounding defeats at the hands of Davidson, Wake Forest and William and Mary.

V. M. I. supporters are hoping that the Cadets' badly battered squad will be in top shape for the clash. The Squadron has been hampered by injuries for several weeks, but if Joe Muha's now-famous ankle is healed and several other cripplés are able to play, the odds will be considerably evened.

Historic Fairgrounds Opens 75-Day Race Meet Tomorrow

Leading Horses, Jockeys Will Be Seen in Action; Officials Look for Banner Session

By the Associated Press
New Orleans, Nov. 24.—New Orleans lifts the curtain Thanksgiving Day on a 75-day racing program at the Fair Grounds which promises no particular drain on transportation unless they start rationing shoe leather.

For the beautiful, historic grounds lies only a couple of miles from downtown Canal Street—so close in, in fact, that the horse race loving fraternity here had a desperate battle two years ago to prevent its being broken up into a residential subdivision when the old association put the plant up for sale.

New Orleans as yet hasn't felt the pinch of railroad transportation too much, and the Fair Grounds backers believe the city is in a favored position because of Florida's racing transportation problems, and the West Coast winter racing blackout.

Purse Value Increased

The Fair Grounds Breeders Association has upped its purses and almost doubled the season, appealing to both jockeys and owners. The public yet is to be heard from, but the association is counting on the more than 100,000 warworkers and soldiers that have joined the previous 500,000 residents here to give the track a war boom.

Uline's Makes Special Rate For Servicemen

A new policy whereby uniformed men of all services can enjoy ice hockey at a special rate will be introduced at Uline Arena Saturday night when Washington's Lions entertain the popular Cleveland Barons in an American Hockey League match at 8:30 o'clock.

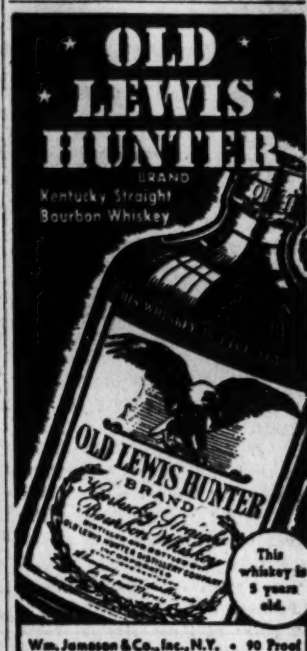

Owner Michael J. Uline last night announced that servicemen in uniform and their dates will be admitted to a special section of reserved seats upon payment of 55 cents.

"We are making this move upon the suggestion of many of our friends and hockey fans in the service," Uline said. "We are aware that many servicemen who used to play, or witness ice hockey in other cities are now located around Washington, and will welcome this opportunity of attending our home games."

MacPhail Among Honored Guests at G. W. Alumni Dinner

Larry MacPhail, a graduate of George Washington University and former president of the Brooklyn Dodgers, will be among guests at the G. W. U. Alumni Association's annual stag dinner and smoker next Tuesday evening at the Wardman-Park Hotel.

Capt. Paul E. Pihl, who accompanied Wendell Willkie on a 'round-the-world tour, also will speak at the dinner. He was formerly United States Naval Air Attache in Berlin.

This function, which generally attracts around 400 people, has become one of the most successful alumni events. It was started in 1939 when Hugh H. Clegg was president of the Alumni Association. Clegg, a graduate in law, is assistant director of the FBI.

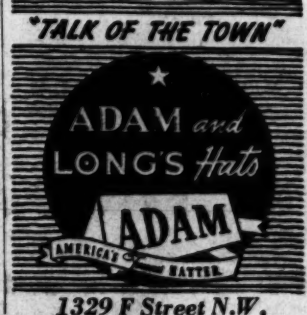

Dr. Elmer Louis Kayser, professor of European History and dean of university students at the university, will be toastmaster of the evening, while Coach Johnny Baker and his Colonial football team will be guests of honor.

Dr. William M. Sweet, a graduate in dentistry and vice president of the General Alumni Association, is chairman of the committee in charge of arrangements. Tickets may be secured from Dr. Sweet or by calling Lester Smith, alumni secretary, at the university.

Among guest speakers who have appeared on the program in the past were the late Brian Bell, former chief of the Washington Bureau of the Associated Press, and Capt. Eddie Rickenbacker, flying ace recently lost and later found in the Pacific.

Overlin Takes Bowie Horse Handily Over Sloppy Track

Sparkling Maid 3d To $11 Shot

Clingman Rides Feature Winner; Pharien Is Victor At $19.80 Mutuel

By Walter Haight

Bowie, Md., Nov. 24.—Away from the races since the Laurel meeting, W. H. Lipscomb's Overlin found a sloppy track to her liking and led every jump of the St. Margaret's Purse, the feature of the Tuesday program at this point. Jockey Darrell Clingman, who has been riding in a sensational manner recently, booted the daughter of the off-track loving Dunlin to victory by two lengths.

N. J. Agnello's Gallant Witch was second, taking a photograph decision for the place from Mrs. E. C. Saulsbury's Sparkling Maid. Three others, including a stablemate of the winner, competed in the test of six furlongs for 2-year-olds fillies.

Winner of three straight races before being shipped here from New York, Sparkling Maid was well played, and Overlin returned a $11.50 mutuel. The filly, trained by C. M. Felner of Berryville, Va., was clocked in 1:14 for the second day in a row, the crowd was small and betting was light.

Gallant Witch was first out of the gate, but had hardly gotten under way before Clingman shot Overlin into the lead. Sparkling Maid went to the leader boldly, but Overlin drew out to a length lead. In the stretch, Sparkling Maid made another move, but Clingman shook up his mount and drew out. Sparkling Maid weakened and fell victim to a closing bid of Gallant Witch. The other three in the field were not prominent at any stage.

In the second-best offering on the card Mrs. R. Feinberg's Pharien was a long-shot winner under good handling by Jockey Danny Socca of Washington. Pharien came from behind to hang a defeat on R. J. Randolph's Isle de Pine, with Harry Neustetter's One Link third in this field of six. Socca had Pharien off well, but did not hurry the filly in the early stages. After the leaders had run themselves dizzy, Socca placed his charge to a drive and she disposed of Isle de Pine to win going away. Pharien paid $19.80.

For the first time at the meeting, a favorite won the first race. Jockey Johnny Gilbert booted G. R. Watkins' Good Lawyer home a length and a half in advance of Gallant Mowlee, with Fly Whisk third. The winner paid a mere $3.30 and started the ball rolling on a $17.10 pay-off in the daily double. H. O. Collins' The Thane took the second race in the role of a $5.00 favorite and led Pete's Bet and Grey Wolf to the finish line. The Thane won by a neck and was handled by Jockey Paul Kleper.

Dusek Faces Threat Tonight In Shapiro

A serious threat to Ernie Dusek's reign as a headliner at the Tanager's Arena may develop tonight in the person of Benny Shapiro of Canada who faces the Nebraska Wildcat in the feature bout.

It may be Shapiro's last chance in a long time to prove whether he rates the top billing. But should Benjamin defeat Dusek his star will be high, his booking as a topliner continuous throughout the winter.

Shapiro and Dusek are listed for a one-hour limit match, which may be right down the former's alley. In the bout he lost to London. Shapiro was getting along famously, well on his way either to victory or a draw, until he sprained his knee. London, sensing this, took advantage of the injury and climaxed the match with a let hold.

Oddly enough, Shapiro features a corkscrew toe hold which already has proven the bane of three-fourths of his opponents. Dusek, like London, features an airplane spin.

The semiwild and finds Johnny Long, the tall Baltimore shipyard worker, opposing George Becker of Milwaukee, who is new to this section.

Michele Leone of Boston will face Milo Steinborn, the Memphis "Strong Man," in a special 30-minute bout.

Returning for the second straight week is the Yellow Mask, hooded grappler, who will oppose Joe De-Valto of Canada. In the match Henry Piers will tangle with John M. las.

First bout is at 9 o'clock.

Umpire Moriarty's Wife Seeks Divorce

His wife Mary, in a divorce suit filed today, not only complained of his temper but asserted he frequently struck her. She asked custody of their son, David, 5.

Southern California Rated Better Than Record Indicates

Trojans Hope To Beat Irish With Speed

Notre Dame Team Scouted in Game With Northwestern By Coach Gravath

By the Associated Press
Los Angeles, Nov. 24.—May be Frank Leahy has attended to this, but here's a warning for his Notre Dame football team: The Southern California Trojans are a better lot than the season record would indicate.

Compare these scores: Notre Dame 27, Stanford 0; Stanford 14, Southern California 6.

But hold on! The Ramblers and the Trojans are going to play it out here Saturday, anyway, and the growing suspicion in Los Angeles that the home town club has at least an even chance will lure the biggest crowd of the season into Memorial Coliseum. More than 60,000 tickets have been sold, and there's room for 43,000 more.

Scouted Notre Dame

Coach Newell (Jeff) Cravath, of the Trojans, scouted Notre Dame last week in its 27-0 win over Northwestern. He flew back with word the Irish had fine end play and a good defense against long passes, but he thought he found some weaknesses. Cravath probably has more really fast ball carriers than any coach in the country and they'll be pointing in and out of the line-up Saturday.

The Trojans hope to beat the Irish with speed. Mickey McCardle, the left halfback, has set up several touchdowns by bolting 40 to 50 yards on punt returns. Howard Callahan, described by Notre Dame Scout Wayne Milner as one of the fastest he had seen in action; Hubie Kerns, national 440-yard champion last year and others from Dean Cromwell's U. S. C. track team will take turns in the tailback spot.

Many Are Sophomores

Many of these youngsters are sophomores. Lacking experience, they are inclined to have their good days and their bad. In the last two games they were "on." The Trojans breezed through California, 21-7, and battered Oregon, 40-0.

If the Fighting Irish are tired by a tough schedule of nine games in successive weeks they are dropping into a bad spot against Southern California. Leahy's boys, playing their best game, ought to win, but they had their hands full last season in South Bend beating a much weaker Trojan eleven, 20-18.

Hilda Reeves Tops Bowling at Hyattsville

Hilda Reeves' highs of 145-341 topped the Prince Georges Ladies bowling at Hyattsville last night and aided her Spiller's to a pair over the All-Stars despite Irene Youstey's 321. Miss Bush's 329 for Waldrop's led to the odd tilt over Mike Young's Cafe and Helen Heinrich's 335 aided Wonder Bread to a pair over Cherie's Beauty Salon. A 1550 score gave high team to Spiller's.

It's just a rumor

We're riding down this rumor that Martin's V.V.O. is hard to get. For a while it's true that we had to ration some of our best dealers, and it's also true that many people who wear by V.V.O. decided to play safe and stocked up.

Now, however, V.V.O. is arriving from the other side of the Atlantic in regular fashion. You can get all of this famous liqueur Scotch that you want, at your favorite bar, or at your dealer's. And remember, you pay no more for V.V.O. quality, including the advantage of 88 proof, instead of the usual 86.8.

Wills Signed For Stribling Fight Monday

Frankie Wills, Washington welterweight who boasts a string of 10 straight victories, yesterday was signed to meet Ken Stribling, D. C. Negro boxer, in one of the featured eight-rounders in Promoter Joe Turner's next Monday boxing show at the W Street arena.

Wills, who achieved his most notable triumph several weeks ago when he whipped tough Stoney Lewis, Negro battler, in eight rounds, will doubtless be given a shot at Al "Bummy" Davis in the near future if he gets over Stribling.

Stribling was kayoed by Davis after the D. C. Negro had given a good account for several rounds before wiling under the Brownsville boy's two-fisted attack. It was Stribling's first loss in nine fights as a professional.

Another eight rounder will be booked for the semifinal, Turner announced.

Fishing with JACK BELL

Recently we learned that a settlement regarding fishing rights in the Potomac River bordering the State of West Virginia was rapidly drawing to a close.

Today we received word that a solution to this long-fought-over privilege has advanced another step. A meeting between the fish officials of both States will be held in Cumberland on December 9.

Sportsmen of West Virginia along with their State Game Commission have agreed upon a plan to be presented to the officials of Maryland's Commission. Briefly, we reiterate the basis for this new agreement: For the privilege of allowing holders of a West Virginia fishing license to fish in the Potomac; West Virginia would extend to holders of a Maryland angling license the privilege of fishing the Potomac from the West Virginia shore, and to fish in the tributaries of the Potomac along the West Virginia side for a half mile inland.

These tributaries include such famous bass waters as the south branch of the Potomac, the Caccapon, Obeguen, Sleepy Creek and the Shenandoah River. Once a formula is accepted by both sides, it will only require the action of the Legislatures of both States and the signatures of their respective Governors to make the compact a law. It is most fortunate for the angler that the Legislatures of both States are to meet early in 1943 and with the sportsmen behind these new advances and a favorable agreement between game officials of both States, it will be only a matter of form for the Legislature to pass upon this new compact.

At last, after many meetings extending over a period of months, Virginia's Game and Inland Fish Commission has finally announced its new director.

At one time or another, three well known sportsmen and conservationists were mentioned for the job. They were Charlie Elliott of Georgia, I. T. Quinn, formerly administrative head of the Alabama Commission, and Seth Gordon, famed director of Pennsylvania's Game Commission.

The new man is Talbot E. "Tibbs" Clarke, formerly of the United States Forest Service. "Tibbs" has been in charge of game management on the George Washington National Forest, in Virginia, for the past five years, during which he has also worked in cooperation with Virginia's State Game Department in developing the "Big Levels" area comprising around 1,000,000 acres of wild lands in Virginia.

He was one of the organizers of Virginia's courses in game management for game wardens of the State, at the same time also an instructor on the program. These courses have met with such marked success, that many States are now patterning similar programs for their game wardens.

Making his first public statement recently, Clarke announced that he intends to inaugurate several changes in the Old Dominion, one of which will be the simplification of the present complicated Virginia game regulations for open seasons. The hunting seasons in Virginia are even more complicated than those of Maryland.

G.W.U. Honors President Of Ecuador

President Carlos Alberto Arroyo del Rio of Ecuador, who arrived here Monday for a visit to the United States, was described as a "complete American" yesterday in a citation which accompanied an honorary doctorate of laws conferred upon him by George Washington University.

At a special convocation held in the United States Chamber of Commerce auditorium and attended by the G. W. U. faculty and a number of Government and diplomatic representatives, President Cloyd H. Marvin of the university related the action taken by Ecuador in defense of democratic government and said that country's President had come here "to bear a message and a pledge and to know of our pledge."

Basis of Democracy

"And this giving and taking of pledges based on intimate understanding of a personal handshake and a meeting of minds is the basis of democracy. For democracy is founded upon faith in reason; the rule of reason in human affairs."

He said G. W. U. was able to confer the degree upon President Arroyo del Rio "because your state and our state believe in liberty."

The citation read:

"Distinguished educator, illustrious lawyer and eminent statesman; exemplar to his people of the virtues that build a home and the state; staunch advocate of inter-American solidarity, his beliefs and actions mark him as being in every fiber a true citizen of Ecuador and a complete American."

Expresses Gratitude

The Ecuadorian expressed gratitude for the honor conferred upon him and his country and said of G. W. U. that "it is an illustrious institution and its deeds and reputation are widely known."

The United States Marine Band Orchestra furnished music for the exercises. Announcement of the convocation was made by Dr. Elmer Louis Kayser, dean of the university, and Gilbert Grosvenor, of the G. W. U. board of trustees, presented President Arroyo del Rio as a candidate for the degree.

Hearing to Weigh Resuming Service On Old Dominion

A 90-day trial resumption of passenger service by the Washington & Old Dominion Railroad, to which the carrier has conditionally agreed, became contingent yesterday upon a further hearing on December 21 before the Virginia State Corporation Commission.

Agreement to resume service on the short line, which links Leesburg and Purcellville with Washington, was tentatively reached at a hearing Monday. But Mrs. Nellie Fletcher of Washington, who owns property on the line and has led a long fight to force the railroad to carry passengers, indicated it wasn't very satisfactory with her.

The whole case was continued with the idea of giving the carrier, the Office of Defense Transportation and other parties time to present additional facts on the subject.

OPA Test Lays Up Half Peoria Autos

By the Associated Press

Peoria, Ill., Nov. 24.—Workers rode sardine-packed trolleys, jammed buses, crowded motor cars, bicycles and horses to their jobs today—because in theory, half of the community's automobiles were gathering cobwebs in garages.

It was a test arranged by the Office of Price Administration, Paul Baugh of OPA's gasoline rationing branch explained that it was designed to (1) simulate conditions that would prevail if half the Nation's autos were laid up for lack of tires, and (2) determine the effects of such a situation.

Citizens of the greater Peoria area, with a population of 130,000 and 40,000 cars, were asked to cooperate on a voluntary basis for one day. They were requested to leave automobiles with odd-numbered license plates at home and get to work by other means.

Observers reported cooperation was good. But streetcars and buses were loaded to capacity. Many motorists with even-numbered plates shared their autos with others.

E. A. Blank rode his horse, Billy, on a 10-mile canter from home to office. A pony cart, borrowed from his children, brought C. Arthur Locker down town.

The Caterpillar Tractor Co., largest industry in town, had no increases in tardiness or absences. Merchants advised business was about normal. Parking spaces yawned on streets.

A check on a bridge approaching the Caterpillar plant showed that in a 20-minute period 191 automobiles carried 581 workers across this morning compared with 261 autos and 597 passengers in the same time yesterday.

A flip of a coin by Mayor E. M. Woodruff decided whether cars with even or odd numbered licenses should operate.

He had two cars—one with each type of plate.

Citizens Council Praises Randolph

The Northwestern Citizens Council, meeting at the home of President Owen B. French, 3420 Thirty-sixth Street Northwest, unanimously expressed "appreciation to the Second Congressional District of West Virginia for their sound judgment in returning Representative Jennings Randolph to Congress."

The resolution cites Randolph for his services as chairman of the House District Committee. The council also urged reduction of the price of weekly passes of the Capital Transit Co. to $1 and of six tokens to 40 cents. Another resolution asked the District Office of Engineers to investigate recurring complaints of duplications of inspections and to reduce personnel working on overlapping tasks.

Venereal Disease Rate of Army in U. S. Reported Falling

By Howard W. Blakeslee

Associated Press Science Editor

The rate of venereal disease in the American Army in the United States has been falling ever since Pearl Harbor.

The decrease breaks all American military records, in war or peace. It signals a change of wider significance in its promise to carry over to peacetime into a new high of national health.

For the home folks are beginning to cooperate with the Army and Navy to make venereal disease control primarily a public health measure, a medical job instead of only a political football and a moral issue.

The Army rates cannot be published, due to War Department request. But the broad facts are available.

In this Army, the highest venereal rate never has been up to the lowest of the World War. That war in turn was way under the Civil War.

The military disease rate is unbreakably locked with the home community rates. When the first million of venereal-free young men entered the present Army, some acquired venereal disease. The rates everywhere tended to reach, but not pass, those of the community where the soldiers were stationed.

How Rate Fluctuates

Furthermore, now, when an outfit moves from a community with a low rate to a high-rate community, the soldiers' rate of infection also rises. Clinching this parallel, the military infection drops when the move is reversed, going from a high to a low-rate venereal community.

The drop which began after Pearl Harbor is considered mainly due to medical rather than patriotic and psychological reasons. Pearl Harbor coincided with completion of medical organization, which placed a venereal disease control officer in every military encampment. The work of these officers quickly showed results.

on commercial prostitution, hitting at the profits of men and women operators who procured girls, and at the graft protecting them.

Also at the officers' disposal, and invoked twice to date, is the May Act. This law makes commercial prostitution a Federal offense in areas near military encampments, when so designated by the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy. The act was adopted by Congress in July, 1941, and first invoked 10 months later in Tennessee about Camp Forrest.

The prohibited area is huge, a solid block of 27 counties in the middle of the State, blanketing it from border to border north and south.

Penalty $1000 Fine

Under the May Act, engaging in prostitution or aiding it are punishable by a fine of not more than $1000 or one-year imprisonment, or both.

The venereal rate at Camp Forrest already has begun to drop. One month after the act was invoked, investigators of the American Social Hygiene Association, Inc., found no prostitution in 17 of the 27 counties. Sixteen months previously Route 41 between Nashville and Chattanooga had been found to be sprinkled with tough places. Now these resorts are closed.

The second invocation of the May Act was in North Carolina, near the end of last July, in 12 counties about Fort Bragg.

But in one respect North Carolina is quite a different experimental area from Tennessee. North Carolina was rated as one of the top 14 States in the Nation in effective social hygiene laws.

Partly as a result of the strong North Carolina code, the local cooperation with the FBI the May Act enforces was immediately highly effective.

The Army has figures showing how each American encampment compares, in venereal disease, with every other similar community. These figures are not made public. They are given privately to authorities of each community, as an aid to strengthening the social hygiene codes.

The Aviation Industry needs Seed Money

THIS Victory crop is sweet—10,000 planes per month next year seem certain... 5,000 per month already passed... World-wide average of four enemy planes knocked down for every American plane lost... Jap average five to one... Still better planes coming off the line.

And beyond the war, some people see a vast new industrial field opening up for America:

► Giant freight and passenger airliners, flying the airocean to every part of the globe, linking our cities in a traffic network that will obliterate time.

Family planes that will jump golfers to far off greens:

What are the chances for this exciting post-war crop of commerce and convenient travel from our aviation industry?

We think the chances are rather slim, and we ask you to take a serious look at the reason.

In our proper anxiety to prevent inflation and control war profits, we have passed tax laws that are taking away most of the "seed money" that aviation companies will need when the time comes to go it on their own in the post-war world.

► "Seed money" is that part of profit which is held for re-investment in a business to insure its growth.

"Seed money" will pay for research on new and better products. It will pay for retooling when post-war models are produced. It will pay for the study of methods to get the lower costs that widen markets. It will pay for setting up new distributors and dealers, and for hundreds of other activities that are involved in the growth of a business.

► American industry has grown on "seed money." It has been a national characteristic to re-invest most of our profits in development.

A dangerous confusion between personal profit (salaries and dividends) and re-invested profit (which we have called "seed money") has found its way into our taxing system.

The tax law, and government contracts, should allow American Industry to accumulate funds for the numerous tasks of post-war development.

A sum greater than the total now remaining after taxes will be needed, if we are to take advantage of the new opportunities that will exist after the war.

It is probably the oldest law in economics that enough of each crop must be saved to provide seed for future crops.

Ask your Congressman to see that this economic law is not disregarded in an effort to take excess profits out of war.

GIVE HER ONE TON OF ROSES

By Adelaide Kerr

Santa Claus collaborated with Uncle Sam in producing the fragrant perfumes and scents which will hang on candle-lit trees this Christmas.

Since Uncle Sam cut the cosmetic supply of alcohol to 70 per cent of normal, Santa Claus' perfumers have poured most of it into concentrated perfumes and less into colognes which have a high alcohol content. And because the war curtailed the import of essential oils, some of Uncle Sam's horticulturists and chemists have been working overtime to find substitutes for them.

"The alcohol shortage presents a greater difficulty in perfume making now than essential oils," says S. L. Mayham, executive secretary of the Toilet Goods Association. "Many perfumers had quite a stock of essential oils on hand. Others are scraping the bottoms of their bottles. But they trade. They swap a little rose for a little jasmine, and so on. So this year's perfumes will be just about the same as we have had before. But after that it's a question."

War-time Difficulties

In cutting short the import of essential oils, World War II put a damper on an industry that has flourished since Cleopatra's day. Attar of roses from Bulgaria, musk from Tibet, sandalwood oil from India, rose, lily, jasmine and violet from France and oil of vetiver from Java have poured into perfumers' falcorns and out again into intricate mixtures which formed mysterious scents.

"When the supply of most of the essential oils was cut off, we were faced with a real problem," says Maurice Handman, president of Lengyel Perfums, Ltd. "We bought as many as we could, but we were always short one or two critical oils. So we turned to synthetics for many of our scents. It used to take nearly 25 tons of violets to make an ounce of the natural oil and a ton of roses to obtain 10 ounces of the natural oil. Today we get the scents of both these flowers, as well as the odors of lily of the valley and others from the laboratory. One of the chemist's most important contributions to perfume is synthetic musk."

Domestic Products

Horticulturists of the western hemisphere have added their contributions to perfume bottles too.

"Oil of lavender is being produced in the State of Washington and rose oil is being produced on an experimental basis in the rose fields of Texas," says Dr. Ernest Guenther, chief research chemist of Fritzsche Brothers, New York manufacturers and suppliers of essential oils. "Experiments are now being made in Haiti and Brazil to produce oil of vetiver, which comes from the distillation of a fragrant root. Other experiments are being made in the Argentine to produce absolute of acacia."

Most perfumers agree that the chemist has outstripped the gardener in replacing the lost essential oils, since his is a much quicker process. They are watching the work of both eagerly. "After this Christmas," they say, "we'll have to resort to more than 50 per cent substitutes on essential oils."

While the shortage of essential oils is not reflected in Santa Claus' 1942 Christmas supply of scents, the shortage of alcohol is. Fewer bottles of colognes are going to bulge in Christmas stockings. To take their places there are new cream colognes made without a drop of alcohol and solid colognes (perfumed sticks which have a consistency like camphor ice). Both add fragrances to skins.

Most of the containers in which the Christmas scents are packaged eliminate fancy wrappings, gold ribbons and tassels.

To Whip It

Ordinary coffee cream can be whipped if it is chilled to the freezing point first in the freezer. Just pour the cream in the whipping bowl, and place the bowl in your freezer if it is large enough to hold it; if not, cool the bowl elsewhere in the refrigerator at the same time you are chilling the cream in the freezer. Takes only a few minutes.

Warm Giving

By Jeanne Contini

If you have $6 or less to spend on gifts for your beloved family, a sweater is the kind of present they'll bless you for. When the thermometer drops and the snow melts along the window panes, you'll know your gift is keeping them warm. Going down the list...

Father:

We take the liberty of stating that he will get a lot more pleasure out of a fine sleeveless sweater he can wear under his jacket while poking around the garden or air-raid wardening than a brass-mounted ash tray or a purple necktie. We found this sweater in pure wool Valcuna, which is guaranteed not to stretch, shrink, sag or wrinkle, and is moth-proof for at least one year. It is also washable. A great deal for about...$4.

Mother:

She'll look lovely and get lots of wear out of a clementine fitted cardigan. She can put it on over her wool dresses or use it as a top for long or short skirts. The buttons look like gold filigree and it comes in a wealth of delicious colors. Mauve-pink would be our first choice, but then you can see...about $4.

Grandma:

Would be very pleased with a coat sweater that shows you don't consider her an old lady. The one we picture is flattering and young without being done up. It is softly gathered over the bosom onto a curved yoke and buttons with glossy buttons. The neckline is low enough for a string of pearls or a rippling jabot. If she has white hair, get it in orchid or powder blue. It also comes in several other shades, including black. Sizes 32 to 46...about $5.

Sis:

A sweater to melt her heart and make her feel grown up. Here's one in pure wool with tiny hand-embroidered flowers around the neck. It would look charming under her suit or with a black velvet skirt. The coral red is particularly pretty, also yellow, blue or aqua if you like...around $6.

Brother: Give him a real boy's sweater that can take plenty of punishment. The elbows of this one are reinforced and it zips high up the front to keep out the wind. Made of a wool, rayon and cotton mixture that washes well and is a first-class insulator...around $3.

Baby:

A navy blue cardigan will keep him warm and allow him to plunge over the rugs as much as he pleases without worrying his mother about preserving that freshly-tubbed look. White wool edges the neckline. A find for under $2.

Would You Like to Grow Herbs at Home?

By Sam Jackson

Berkeley, Calif. (AP).—War has cut off the supply of so many spices and medicinal herbs that a few American gardeners are very few—stand to make some quick profits by growing them here at home.

When you hear of the sage used to flavor your sausage jumping from 4 cents to a dollar a pound you feel like digging up your present garden and planting sage.

There is a real demand for quinine, but the cinchona tree from which it comes requires a tropical climate.

Poppy seeds are an attractive opportunity, but the poppy also produces opium and the grower must first make his peace with narcotic authorities.

Other home-growing enterprises run into a variety of troubles.

There is a real demand for quinine, but the cinchona tree from which it comes requires a tropical climate.

Poppy seeds are an attractive opportunity, but the poppy also produces opium and the grower must first make his peace with narcotic authorities.

Competition

Digitalis, the heart stimulant, is a product of the common foxglove and the grower would be up against competition from the wild plant of the Pacific Northwest.

Belladonna, for the eyes, has attracted a few growers since the price skyrocketed to $1 a pound, but the market is small.

Plant products formerly imported for perfumes and for insecticides as a rule have small and inactive markets. William J. Cecil, California director of agriculture, recommends that definite sale contracts be arranged before the farmer risks time and money growing such unfamiliar crops.

Fashion in Reverse

Remember 1930?—the days when open shoes appeared to reveal painted toes; colored shoes startled and then pleased; rumble seats in sport roadsters were a social "must," and fashion brought forth white shoes for men?

Now open shoes may be closed to hide cotton toes; most colored shoes will be taboo this spring; rumble seats are unpatriotic unless crowded with workers, and white shoes for men—well!

Store Ice Cream In Box or Tray, It's Up To You

When it comes to storing packaged ice cream in the refrigerator, there seem to be two schools of thought on the subject. Half the refrigerator users place the cream in the freezer in its original carton (if said carton is of convenient size and shape) while the other half remove the cream to an ice tray first.

It is usually necessary to turn the temperature control to a slightly colder position when leaving ice cream in the package, since the paper carton is not as good a conductor of cold as the metal tray.

Since all dairy products are most susceptible to stray odors, it is best, if you plan to keep ice cream any length of time, to leave the package closed or to cover the tray in which it is placed. Waxed paper makes a suitable cover, and also prevents frost from collecting on the surface of the ice cream.

Girl on Vacation Meets Boy Who Professes To Love Her and Begs Her to Write, Which She Does; But His Replies Are Discouraging

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I am a girl 21 years old, a student in college. Last summer, while on vacation in another city, I met a young man a few months older than I—who is attractive in appearance, intelligent, of good family and popular with everyone; but especially liked by girls. I spent a month in that city and it was during the last week of my stay that we really got acquainted,—at a party. After that, we were together every night until I left. He said I was the first girl he had ever been in love with; that he seemed to belong with me, etc. He even made some references to the future (as if he were thinking of marriage) and begged me not to leave. He made me promise that I would write him as soon as I got home. All this was said in a manner of great sincerity; and we had many heart-to-heart talks about life, people, etc.

Well, I wrote him as soon as I got home,—as I had promised. For two weeks I waited, while he made no reply. Then I dropped a line of inquiry, thinking I might have used the wrong address. A few nights later, he called long distance to say he had been working on two jobs and hadn't time to write. He asked if I still loved him, etc. I evaded the question. The following week, I had a letter from him, which began with "Dearest," and ended, "Lovingly." He said he had been sick since he talked to me; that he hoped to visit me in about a month; made some general remarks; apologized for being a dull correspondent and said he would write again soon. Two weeks later, I had another letter, in which he spoke of visiting me at Christmas and asked for a speedy reply. After 10 days, I answered in a friendly but impersonal tone. That was two weeks ago,—and I have heard nothing from him since.

Miss Haworth, I just don't know what to make of all this. Before I left his city, we had exchanged mementos. My gift to him was a class ring. His to me was bought at a jewelry store. We chose it together; but because it needed some alteration, he promised to send it the following week. (It was not a ring.) I have not received it, although in his first letter he had said it would be along in a couple of days. What should my next step be? This is the first time I have ever believed I was in love; and his seeming indifference has made me miserable.

Perhaps I should add that our dealings with each other were most admirable and that I am not a "forward" person. Also, during that week, he was expecting to join the Air Corps and since then he has been accepted. Any explanation you can give me, or any advice on the proper thing to do, will be greatly appreciated. Sincerely, BEWILDERED.

Romance Comparable To High Fever

DEAR BEWILDERED: I suppose the explanation of the young man's baffling conduct is simply this: That high-tension week in which you two "discovered" each other, and devoted the dwindling and concomitantly precious hours before the "deadline" of your imminent departure to baring your hearts and minds to each other, began to seem to him,—shortly after you left, and increasingly since then,—like "something that happened in a dream." Or, to state it another way, you were like a dazzling meteor flaming suddenly in the firmament of his scheme of things. He was fascinated by the strange mystery of your personality, so that temporarily all other friends and interests were in eclipse.

But when you had retired (as per schedule) over the horizon, the spell which you had cast, and what had appeared to be, while you were there, the inexplicable significance of the palpitation "boy-meets-girl" experience, began to fade. I daresay that after one or two long nights of sleep,—as naturally would follow an abrupt cessation of such a whirlwind emergency expenditure of nervous energy,—and a few days given to picking up where he had left off with other friends (just after meeting you), he found himself somewhat in the frame of mind of a person at last clearly emerged from the turbulent confusion of a high fever. Which is to say,—rather uneasily at a loss to account for the nature of his actions and the tenor of his utterances during the seizure.

And early in his soberly reflective interval of trying to take inventory of just what had happened; of trying to figure out what the thunderbolt attraction really amounted to,—whether it was "the real article," to be seriously followed through; or a "flash in the pan," that were better forgotten,—along comes your fervently promised (and fervently asked-for) letter, of course. A letter written, no doubt, in perfect fidelity to the motif of tender and tremulous intimacy of spirit that had characterized your torrential exchange of confidences during that hectic week of exalted romanticism. And a letter which, by virtue of its artlessly and confidently portrayed assumption that a state of mutual and exclusive true love had been established, would seem to the boy to breathe a "possessive" air; so that immediately and instinctively he would react against the proposition. And if that seems an unreasonable and, indeed, almost a perfidious reaction on his part,—I can only say that it is a fairly characteristic reaction of the male to the female who "wears her heart on her sleeve," in letters to him, in the early stages of sentimental adventuring.

Frank Love Letters Intimidate Suitors

Whereas the spoken word of clinging devotion may, when synchronized with his mood of the moment, fall soothingly on his ears, the same sentiment, proclaimed in writing,—which he first reads in the cold light of day, when his mind is attuned to mundane and prosaic matters,—may strike him as cloyingly fervid or unduly presumptuous, with the result aforementioned, namely: that rather unreasonably but very definitely, he suddenly and involuntarily "freezes up" into a defensive attitude toward her. Thus, as you have learned (to your present dismay, although to your certain profit in later romances), there is a mistake to let him talk you into writing the first follow-up letter after parting. It would have been wiser policy and better taste to have let him break trail in that regard; and to have kept his pace in spacing replies; above all, to have confined your comment to a chatty vein, avoiding any reference to the love which supposedly exists, except for a reassuringly affectionate signature, or cheerfully mock-tender sign-off statement. As a matter of fact, in the latest issue of Vogue Magazine, Paul Gallico authors an article entitled, "Are You Attractive to Men?"—an article in which he emphasizes, among other things, a man's helpless distaste for "all-out" love letters, even from the woman he loves. "What he likes to hear," says Mr. Gallico, in effect, "is what you've been up to; the news and gossip of your social goings-on. That gives him a line on how faithful you're being to him. Keep your punch-line about the state of your feelings to the very end." And even then, I gather, it should be both restrained and brief, to be gladly received.

So much for the explanation of your beau's weather vane attitude,—which clearly signifies growing indifference. As for the "proper thing to do,"—that consists simply in doing nothing, on your own initiative, to revive his interest; or to precipitate a discussion of the fizzle. You are probably wondering, "But what about my class ring? Do I let him keep that? If I don't mean anything to him, shouldn't I get it back?" In due time, yes, I think you should,—but only for the reason that you wouldn't want a fickle-type man permanently owning that evidence of your mistakenly-invested hope. If you were to tackle him for it now, however, he would probably attribute the request to pique,—and might either slam it back to you, by return mail, or ignore the suggestion, as he has the contents of previous letters. Add in either case, you would have created a nucleus of downright "bad feeling," to further depress yourself and alienate him.

My advice is to let the situation ride for a while, giving him a chance to make the next move,—as he may, if unmolested. And in the meantime, get into social circulation for all you're worth, to erase the impression he has made on your mind. Then, some time later,—maybe around Christmas, when your interest in him has presumably worn off,—write and ask him, in the most friendly way, to return the ring. In the event you haven't heard from him earlier, I mean. But make your next casual contact with him an occasion for reclaiming the trinket. M. H.

Miss Haworth will be glad to help you in solving your problems. Write her in care of The Post Woman's Page.

Your Baby and Mine

By Myrtle Meyer Eldred

It irks the conscientious parent when she discovers that other children, not so meticulously cared for, seem to grow and thrive, too. What she cannot determine is how much better such children might be had they as good care as her own enjoy.

One mother who feeds and puts her child to bed at regular hours wonders why her child seems no healthier nor better-nurtured than her neighbor's child, who eats when his mother has time to feed him and sleeps when fatigue overcomes him.

This question has been asked many times. One can say only, that the change from irregularity of schedule to regularity from any adult food to food for children, was made because the former practices had been tried and found wanting.

It is no argument in favor of carelessness of diet and irregularity because some children do not succumb because of them. Human beings have an unmeasured capacity to get along under the most discouraging circumstances. But how much stronger, taller, weightier, placid and intelligent might all children be could they be given the best environment conceivable today?

Just superficially no parent can determine to what degree a child is showing the influence of a poor diet or lack of proper rest. Perhaps he does look fat, but his fat may be the result of a generous diet of starch. He may be good-natured, at times, as what baby isn't. It takes more than just a look at a child to determine what heights he might reach under a different set of circumstances.

As parents, it is folly to be upset when other persons fail to be respectful of the standards we hold dear. We have to do the best we can. If our friends and neighbors scoff at our conscientiousness it may be because they want to deafen their own conscience which is telling them they should do otherwise.

When a parent says in defense of her own behavior that she thinks it is foolish to try to stick to schedules or fuss about formulas and proper diets, she is avoiding a feeling of guilt. She has to pretend these are of no consequence or else why isn't she following such practices herself?

Let's be glad that we live in an age when pediatric skill has given us such healthy, gorgeous specimens of babyhood, and preserved for our joy and happiness the largest proportion of babies born to us. That wasn't true in the days whose practices this careless mother is imitating.

Our leaflet, "The First Six Weeks," indicates the usual routine to which the new baby must become accustomed. It may be had by sending a 3-cent stamped, self-addressed envelope with your request to Myrtle Meyer Eldred, in care of The Washington Post.

TOMORROW: "How Shall I Make Up Baby's Bed?"

HAIL, THE MALE SHOPPER!

By Anne Hagner

A new brand of Washington shopper has emerged since local department stores began staying open until 9 p. m. each Thursday—the bewildered, belligerent male, usually dragged into the fray by a stern feminine will, but occasionally sallying forth alone.

This influx of masculinity in the gaudy caverns of F Street is refreshing to both sales forces and lady shoppers, most of whom have never seen a good-sized horde of the stronger sex invading the premises.

No Excuse Left

Because District stores hold their evening sessions, no husband, brother or sweetheart is able to take refuge in the customary excuse about being detained at the office. Now the lady in the case announces that she will come in town early for some of her own shopping, meet him for dinner, and then they can make the rounds of the stores together.

It takes a man of ready wit to escape from this sentence, and usually it is more expedient to give in gracefully than to import a client from Pittsburgh for the evening. So, after lingering over cocktails and dinner as long as possible, at last he is prepared to face the worst. But he is positive that:

- (a) He will be the lone man among thousands of women.
- (b) He will be dragged through acres of lingerie and cosmetic counters.
- (c) He will be stared at as an alien.
- (d) All of his money will be spent before he realizes what has happened.

At this time of year the little woman undoubtedly has planned for him to help her choose presents for various members of both houses; ties for uncles, socks and sweaters for men in the service, compacts for nieces, and so on. She has made a tentative list but she wants him to approve each item and to make suggestions.

Tongue-Tied

Faced by a steel-eyed salesperson with scant time to quibble with uncertain customers, he is rendered tongue-tied and only nods glumly when asked if he prefers this or that. The L. W. buys precisely what she had planned in the first place and complains that, really, he isn't much help.

En route out of the store, she makes a typically feminine exit, buzzing from one aisle to another to finger this, eye that price tag, and weigh relative merits of what she sees. Unaccustomed to these brisk about-faces and diagonals, the poor male emerges panting and exhausted, quite ready to call it an evening.

The lone gentleman shopper is equally pitiable in his own way. If he is in search of something for himself he can rush blindly into the men's department and throw himself at the mercy of a clerk (male), but usually he must buy a present for a lady, and that is when the fun starts.

First, he has no idea about her size, except that she is about so tall. Second, he forgets everything he ever knew about her favorite perfumes, hose, or colors.

Shopper Is Routed

Finally, in desperation, he pays more than he had planned for something exchangeable and makes his getaway. Army or naval officers who exhibit peerless courage on the battlefield are completely nonplussed by an hour in a department store.

There are, of course, a few brilliant exceptions. These men barge into stores as confidently as they would breeze into a second vice president's office, josh mildly with the lass behind the counter, and have the whole business ended in a trice. But they are rare and seldom are found in one's own family—so it's wiser to leave the gentleman of the house at a movie on Thursday evening.

New Treatment Takes Much of the Terror Out of Infantile Paralysis

I have just seen a demonstration of the miracle that is known as "the Kenny method." It is this treatment which will give children a chance to escape the crippling effects of infantile paralysis and I want to tell you about it.

As you probably know, the method was originated by Elizabeth Kenny, the courageous Australian nurse. She is now in Minneapolis training doctors, nurses and physiotherapists from every part of our country.

In the new treatment, the plaster cast is a thing of the past. The patient has a special bed, with boards lengthwise under the mattress, and another board at the foot of the bed. While the pain is acute, hot applications are given every two hours and sometimes even more frequently.

The packs are made of old woolen blankets or other woolen cloth, dipped into boiling water and then put through a very tight wringer, twice. The heat tends to relax the muscles that are in spasm and to alleviate the pain.

No massage is given. But as soon as the patient is ready for it, passive exercise is begun and later active exercise. As explained by Dr. Don Gudakunst, medical director for the National Foundation for Infantile Paralysis which is financing Miss Kenny's work, there is no attempt to build up strength. The purpose of the exercise is to prevent loss of muscular balance and coordination insofar as possible. The patient does not forget how to use his muscles.

When I tell you that it takes a physiotherapist two months to learn what exercises to give and when to give them, you can understand that the treatment is not simple.

Mild stimulation of the muscles may begin as early as the second or third day. At that time the range of movement is extremely limited, but it is enough to help the patient retain mental contact with those particular muscle groups. He is expected to cooperate in these simple exercises, but to keep them relaxed. One of the first exercises consists in pressing the feet flat against the board attached to the foot of the bed. As he improves, the range of the passive exercises is increased and he progresses into mild active exercise.

Remembering how to use the muscles is the key to the patient's recovery. I had infantile paralysis when I was a little girl, but fortunately, there were five children in our family and nobody had time to do much waiting on me. I had to get up and get about and keep on using my muscles. I know that is what kept me from being a cripple. But my case wasn't very severe. Not every child could do that.

The new treatment is so successful in preventing twisted arms and legs that doctors look on it as a miracle of the age. There are now six centers where it is being taught: Stanford University and the University of Southern California, Warm Springs, the University of Minnesota, Northwestern Medical School, the D. T. Watson School of Physiotherapy. More centers are to be established.

Growth as an Indicator Of Child's Development

By Logan Clendening, M. D.

The "Grid Technique" is the name used by pediatricians for following the development of the child from infancy up to 10 or 15 years. It is simply a graphic method of putting down on a carefully ruled grid the summary of the child's growth along various important lines.

If you consider height as one factor which is entitled to a certain number of points in showing satisfactory development, and increase in weight as another factor of the same kind, with the measurements of the neck, shoulders, hips and legs as other factors, and add all these together, you will get a sort of summary of the individual's physical status. This summary is put down as a dot or period at a certain point on your grid.

Now, from infancy to the age of 10, let us say this physical status should change in a progressive, steady and uninterrupted manner—that is, if the child is normal. Even the upsets which are to be expected in infancy and early childhood, such as digestive upsets, intestinal infections, measles, whooping cough, and so forth, do not change the orderly progress of the child, if observed at regular periods.

Indication of Illness

But it is noticeable on looking at many of these charts that when there is an interrupted or irregular process of development it is a pretty good indication that something is the matter with the child. It may be hidden tuberculosis. A diabetic child, which naturally jumps from one extreme to the other of nutritional stability, shows a very irregular chart. So do children with allergy.

In short, it may be said that the best indication of a child's general health is that there should be a regular and orderly development of height, weight and bodily proportions, and the best indication of the fact that the child has something the matter with it is an interrupted orderly development.

We see this commonly illustrated in the cast of twins. Most twins have the same heredity and the same exposure to infectious diseases. They also receive the same nutrition. Most twins, therefore, develop at the same rate and are likely to show the same fluctuations if their development is hampered by ill health. Occasionally we see a pair of twins in which one has had some disturbance not shared by the other, and the difference between their height, weight and bodily proportions is striking.

Theoretically, all children should develop at exactly the same rate on the grid technique. But in a given schoolroom, it has been found that the children will vary between 60 and 160—a 100-point spread.

About 30 per cent of all children are behind their age, as measured by bodily development on the grid technique. In any school where such records are made, the child that needs extra nutrition or medical care is easily spotted.

Leave Out These If Space Small In Refrigerator

No matter how large your refrigerator, the chances are it seems too small, at least part of the time. Here are some things you can leave out of it:

Sugar-preserved food, like dates, jelly, jam, honey and syrup.

Avocados and bananas (the last should never be refrigerated), potatoes, dry onions, squash and apples.

Dried fruits, in the winter. When it's hot, it's better to keep dried prunes, apricots, etc., in the refrigerator.

Vinegar, dried spices, split peas, pop corn, unopened canned and bottled foods (except fresh milk) and cooking fats other than bacon grease and drippings.

Timely Events and Some New Ideas of Interest to Washington Clubwomen

By Genevieve Reynolds
The Post Club Editor

Henceforth, the Newspaper Women's Club of Washington will be known as the American Newspaper Women's Club. The name recently was changed to keep pace with the club's new Good Neighbor policy.

In the future, the club's membership will include outstanding women journalists from the 21 Latin American Republics. Not only will the sister scribbles of the neighboring countries be members in good standing but there will be newspaperwomen from China and eventually all countries of the world. That is the aim of Alice Eversman, president, and other members of the club.

Organized April 4, 1932, by a group of local newspaper women, the club has on its annals many outstanding names—including Mrs. Roosevelt and Mrs. Cordell Hull. In fact, Mrs. Hull was the honorary chairman of the club's sponsored benefit performance of "Carmen" last summer. The $15,000 that was raised then soon will be turned over to the Children's Hospital. The club has an endowed room at Children's Hospital, which it has maintained for several years.

Original organizers of the club included: the late Sally V. H. Pickett of the Washington Star; Kate Scott Brooks of The Washington Post—then society editor and first president of the club. Now, she's the only honorary president. Also, Mary Kearney Ward, Washington Times—now retired from the newspaper game; Elisabeth Elliott Poe of The Post, now with the Times-Herald; Jackie Martin, then of the Times-Herald.

Also, Mabelle Jennings, Herald; Evelyn Peyton Gordon of The Post—now the News; Esther Prager, Herald; Vivia Poe Wilson, Post—now Herald; Elizabeth Kuhn, Times; Marie MacNair, formerly Herald, now The Post; Katherine Brooks, Margaret Hart, of the Star; Betty Nowell, Herald—now in Chicago, and Flora McDonald, Times—now retired.

While the club limits its associate members to 50, at no time have there been more than 35 associate ones on the roll.

And as the individual's scope becomes world wide—so does the club's. In fact, the club members are pointing the way.

National Press Club Holds Luncheon

Leave it to the gals of the press to ferret out food futures. That's exactly what they did at the Women's National Press Club's luncheon meeting yesterday at the Willard Hotel. Half seriously and a good bit satirically—via a skit—Christine Sadler, president, Vergilia Stephenson, and Martha Elyn Slayback predicted black, slightly bitter bread for 1943 menus.

That isn't all—cabbage and potatoes—then potatoes and cabbage; butter as big as a nickel and as thin as a dime. And dehydrated eggs... mock goose... meat, well you merely imagine thick juicy steaks. These are the things that the food editors, Slayback and Stephenson, predicted.

When Miss Sadler inquired about the dessert... a ghost (actor in the skit) replied that she was having treacle pudding. But Ghost No. 2 said, "I'm taking carrots. Haven't you heard the new slogan—'Reach for a carrot instead of a sweet.'"

Begum Shah Nawaz, outstanding political and social leader in her native India, was the guest of honor and speaker at the club's Thanksgiving luncheon.

Democratic Women Hear Gardner Cowles

Take it from Gardner Cowles, Jr.—remember he accompanied Wendell Willkie on his around the world flight—the issue of isolationism is as dead as the issue of secession. Or rather, he thinks it ought to be.

"Like it or not, we might as well pin this thought in our hats," averred Cowles, speaking before members of the Women's National Democratic Club at a luncheon meeting Monday. "The advance of sciences has killed the old political-economic order built on national lines. We have learned that the United States cannot isolate itself and have military safety. But we have yet to learn that we cannot isolate ourselves economically and politically and have prosperity and freedom."

Declaring that the American people must learn these truths, he pointed out that the human race controlled its own destiny and that there is no Santa Claus to give us salvation.

Punctuating his travel reminiscences of five continents with interesting anecdotes, Cowles told several corking good ones. To mention but one. Better still, let the speaker tell his own story. "In Chungking we were wined and dined at 20 course Chinese banquets, morning, noon and night. Finally, I became deathly sick for a few hours when I ate some creamed shark's lip. The next evening at another sumptuous banquet of Chinese food I was enormously pleased and relieved when the dessert arrived and I found it to be plain vanilla ice cream. I turned to an official of the Chungking government seated on my left and expressed my delight. Quite solemnly he explained: 'In April the medical authorities feared China would be swept by a cholera epidemic. Since they had no anticholera serum, and since cholera is frequently spread by milk, they passed a municipal ordinance making it a criminal offense to serve ice cream."

"But," he said, "yesterday I decided ice cream is such a delicacy and we are so pleased Mr. Willkie came to Chungking, I just repealed the ordinance for one day so we could serve you ice cream tonight."

Listening to Cowles you get the definite impression that he is tremendously impressed with the Russians and Chinese. He insisted that while both countries are warring magnificently against the Axis they need more and more materials and help. Furthermore, that it is absolutely essential that they get them.

Strongest overall impressions after flying around the world at war as listed by Cowles are as follows:

Realization of smallness of world. That the supplies being sent to Russia and China are not enough, and despite transportation difficulties and action on several fronts, the United States must send more. That the United Nations will win the war because of preponderance of manpower and resources. That the people of the Arab world, also people of Russia and China—in fact, all that half of the world living between the Red Sea and the Yellow Sea, want more of a share in running this war. Russia and China particularly feel that they should be made really full partners, with the British and ourselves in the conduct of the war and the planning of the peace.

Also, that we must make more clear to our allies and potential allies just what kind of world we in the United States are going to work for when the chance for peace comes. The trip made him more certain that clarification of our postwar plans now will help lick Germany and Japan, since clarification will remove doubts which are keeping some of our allies from fighting with all their hearts. That while the Atlantic Charter as it now stands is a long step in the right direction, in months ahead people of the Eastern world are going to ask more definite and specific steps.

"I was struck by the many people of the world today," said Cowles, "turning longing, hopeful eyes toward the United States, searching for the leadership to guide them toward freedom and opportunity and prosperity which all instinctively feel is possible."

Mrs. Paul V. McNutt was hostess of the day at the luncheon. Mrs. Florence Kerr introduced the guest speaker. Among the honor guests were the speaker's wife, Mrs. Cowles, Jr.; Mrs. Edward Everett Gann, president of the District of Columbia League of Republican Women; Mrs. Robert Patterson, wife of the Undersecretary of War; Mrs. Harold Star, Mrs. Jonathan Garis, Mr. and Mrs. Stanley J. O'Connor and Gen. Philip Fleming.

G. O. P. Women's League Meets

Mrs. Gilbert H. Grosvenor, past president of the League of Republican Women, reviewed "Ambassadors in White" at yesterday's meeting of the group. Members were greeted by President Dolly Curtis Gann and the chairman of the hostess committee, Mrs. Maurice H. Thatcher. Teas and monthly luncheons of the group at the clubhouse have been temporarily discontinued in the interest of food conservation, it was announced. Also reported at the meeting was a change in the meeting date of the Red Cross sewing group. Members will meet with Mrs. Edward A. Keys, chairman, Friday instead of Thursday.

Woman Leader From India Discusses Its Problems

BEGUM SHAH NAWAZ

Food First, Then Education Is India's Need, Says Begum

By Patricia Grady

"Before you give women education, you must give them food," Begum Shah Nawaz speaks of the problems of her native India with the practicality that is the result of her years of experience as a political and social leader in that vast Asiatic subcontinent. This alert-eyed Indian, who is here en route to Montreal where she will be one of her country's delegates to the Institute of Pacific Relations, is a member of the legislative assembly of Punjab and head of the All Indian Women's League.

"Organizations of women tend to be international in their outlook," she comments as she points out that in the women's groups in India, all religions and races are represented. "And the women in my country are playing an increasingly large part in public life. Already there are 80 women members of parliament."

It was only natural that the Begum should find herself with qualities of leadership. Before his death, her father was Jinnah's predecessor as head of the Moslem League and her husband is a member of Parliament. Social work is her forte and she has long been interested in stimulating the interests and leadership of her countrywomen.

"The hope of India is its women," says this sari-draped visitor, "for they are united in their aims. Women have been influential in India for hundreds of years—Cleopatra and Du Barry are not alone in their accomplishments. For many years our women have been voting, though there are certain educational restrictions, and holding office."

In Washington, the Begum has been shocked to find a "colossal ignorance" about her country. Because America will have a large voice at the peace table, she feels it is necessary for us to understand the problems of India and assess them for ourselves.

TIMELY PERSONALITIES

H. I. Shott—Short Term Senator

West Virginia's
New Senator Has
47 Days to Serve

By Peggy Preston

West Virginia's newly seated short-term Senator, Hugh I. Shott, has just 47 days to realize the dream of his life . . . to represent his State in the Senate chamber of Congress.

Elected on November 3, to fill the unexpired term of an office for which he was defeated in the general election of 1936, the Senator was sworn in only a week ago today. On January 3 he will finish his term and return to his native Bluefield.

Kindly and gracious, with the keen, quizzical eyes of the newspaperman that he has been for 60 years, Senator Shott is pleased with his case.

"My only regret is that I will not be here long enough to take the watch apart and see what makes it tick," he said characteristically yesterday. "Quite naturally I can take no part in any extensive legislative program. My duties are of the most limited nature, but I will be on hand for every roll call and perhaps I can serve my constituents in some small ways."

Like a great many of his fellow citizens in West Virginia, Senator Shott is a bit amazed at his fortune.

Senator Surprised At Being Here

"No one was more surprised than I over the outcome of the election," he remarked. "Having been defeated for the office in 1936, I felt I had no right to go into another situation of the same kind at this time."

As a matter of fact, Senator Shott had little to do with his nomination. A lifelong Republican, he has held a unique position in the political cliques of his State. Liked by both Democrats and Republicans, he was a "natural" for the job when it became evident last summer that a short-term Senator would be in order.

It was by way of complimenting the dean of their party that the Republican State Committee selected the white-haired newspaper publisher for nomination to the ticket last summer. And it was done just barely in the nick of time that, for State political matters, Senator Joseph Rosier, who was named by the then Senator

Nealey to fill the latter's unexpired term in the Senate two years ago, was, according to the Constitution to remain in office only until the next general election. Members of both major parties neglected to take note of the short-term fact and Senator Rosier himself filed for reelection only after being reminded of it at the last minute.

However, the matter is all straightened out now and Senator Shott finds himself seated in the Senate, rather breathless by the whole proceedings.

Here in 1928

As Representative

The new Senator is not making his first visit to the Capitol, however. He was there as a member of Congress in 1928-31.

He is by way of an oddity in political circles, for he is, of all things, a native born Virginia Republican.

Born in the Valley of Virginia, in the town of Staunton, not long after Appomattox, he got his political creeds from his parents, who were not the slave-owning class. Later he traveled into the brand-new State of West Virginia and became a printer at the age of 15. His imagination captured by the possibilities of the lusty young State, he settled in the little town of Bluefield, bought a small newspaper and began his career in the newspaper business.

Publisher to Go
Back to Newspaper
In January

The Bluefield Telegraph and the Sunset News are his pride and his joy. To these he has added a radio station and turned a great part of the management over to his two sons, Hugh I. Shott, Jr., and James Shott.

However, he still holds the editorial reins and seldom does a day pass that his papers do not contain an article written by him. As a matter of fact, that is one of the things he plans to get from his experience in Washington—subject matter for editorials—and already he is sending copy back to his city editor.

As to the future and his plans after January 3, the Senator says he will continue his newspaper work as before. But, there is a book he wants to write some day, like every newspaperman. It will be the story of an industrial romance . . . the story of coal, that is the story of West Virginia.

That, however, is merely something in the future. Right now he is intent on making the most of his 47 days in the United States Senate.

President of Ecuador Feted at Luncheon, Dinner

Secretary of State Hull
Host to Carlos Arroyo at Carlton

In honor of Dr. Carlos Arroyo del Rio, President of Ecuador, spending his second day in Washington there was a luncheon yesterday at the Pan American Union, a dinner last evening at the Carlton with the Secretary of State, Cordell Hull, as host. In between official calls President Arroyo held a press conference and received an honorary degree from George Washington University.

The luncheon, held in the Hall of Heroes, followed a special session of the governing board of the Pan American Union, called in honor of Ecuador's Chief Executive. In the role of host was the Secretary of State who is chairman of the board.

MRS. CHARLES F. NOWE

C. F. Nowes Honeymooning In New York

Lieut. Charles Francis Nowe, U. S. A., and his bride, formerly Miss Rosemary Koonz, who were married recently, left after a wedding reception for a trip to New York.

Mrs. Nowe is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Claude Berkeley Koonz. The wedding took place in the Church of the Nativity with the Rev. Walter J. Norris officiating. The bridegroom is the son of Mrs. Marcella Nowe of Philadelphia, and Frank C. Nowe of Washington.

The bride, given in marriage by her father, wore an ivory satin gown made with long sleeves and a circular train. Her veil of ivory tulle was held by a Juliet cap of seed pearls. She carried a prayer book to which was fastened an orchid with a shower of bouvardia. Her only ornament was a gold locket which had been worn by her mother on her wedding day.

Mrs. Andreas Linn Loffler and Mrs. Dorothy Mattingly, sisters of the bride, were her only attendants. They wore gowns made alike of moss green velvet with headresses of ostrich tips. They carried arm bouquets of yellow chrysanthemums.

Lieut. Joseph Weyrich was best man and the ushers were J. Philip Koonz, brother of the bride, and Andreas L. Loffler.

The bride was educated at the Academy of the Sacred Heart. Lieutenant Nowe is a graduate of Villanova College in Philadelphia and attended Georgetown Law School. He was recently graduated from the Officers' Candidate School at Fort Benning, Ga.

Several Parties Are Given for Frances Clark

Miss Frances Annette Clark, whose marriage to Lieut. Sidney Lomax Crook, U. S. Army, will take place on December 5, was the guest of honor at a dinner party and shower given Monday evening by Miss Jacqueline Jones.

Among other events planned in compliment to the bride-elect is a dinner following the wedding rehearsal on December 4, to be given by Miss Mary Porter Couden. Mrs. Mortimer Birdseye, wife of Lieutenant Birdseye, U. S. Army, entertained at dinner last week for the engaged couple.

Miss Clark is the daughter of Mrs. Bert F. Clark. She received her early education in European schools and attended Holton Arms Junior College and George Washington University.

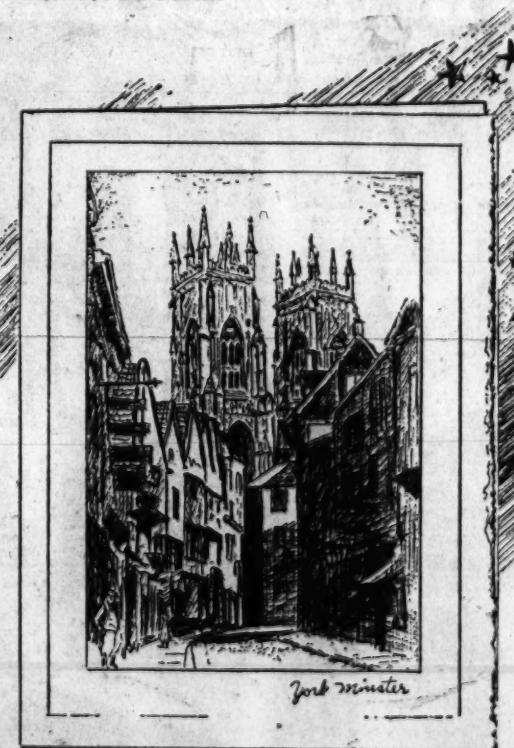

Mary Prettyman To Be Bride of Thomas R. Willard

Mrs. Natalie Goubert Prettyman of New York has announced the engagement of her daughter, Mary Anne, to Thomas Warren Willard, son of Mr. and Mrs. Warren Reece Willard, also of New York.

The prospective bride is the daughter of Maj. George W. Prettyman, U. S. A., retired, of Washington. She is the granddaughter of Mrs. Cleland Davis, wife of Commander Davis, U. S. N., retired, and the late William L. Prettyman, and of the late Mr. and Mrs. Auguste A. Goubert.

Women are standing shoulder-to-shoulder with their men in helping to fight this war—replacing men in hundreds of industries—serving as Nurses and as WAACS and WAVES—giving long hours to Red Cross work—housewives are saving fats to make explosives and turning in discarded silk and nylon hosiery to make powder bags for the guns. But there is more to do—something every woman can do—all the more proudly because this week recognizes your power behind the guns—you can: help enlist the dimes, the quarters and the dollars—your own and others'—enough of them and soon enough—to do the job America has to do—quickly.

'Russian People' Will Have American Premiere Here

Guild Play to New York Direct From National; Capital Beauty Debuts in 'Arabian Nights'; Items of News and Gossip of the Theater

"THE RUSSIAN PEOPLE," Konstantin Simonov's drama recently acquired by the Theater Guild and adapted to the English-speaking stage by Clifford Odets, will have its American premiere in the National Theater on Monday night, December 14. Washington will be the only city to see this widely-discussed play prior to its Broadway opening on Tuesday night, December 29. The local engagement, in line with the Guild's new policy inaugurated this season, will be for two weeks.

Originally produced at the Leningrad Theater last July, "The Russian People" has since been performed in more than 100 theaters throughout the U. S. S. R. Its Soviet success excited the interest of practically all the New York producers. The Theater Guild secured the American rights only after a considerable scramble.

Simonov has established himself as one of Russia's most popular playwrights, in addition to having achieved international fame as a war correspondent, reporting in turn the defense of Moscow, Leningrad and Stalingrad. "The Russian People" thereby becomes the first drama written by an author who has actually spent a year and a half on the bloodiest battle fronts in history to be produced in this country.

It adds something of luster to the National Capital, too, as the foremost producers' favorite proving-ground for their new plays. It will, of course, be a subscription play, for which subscribers to the Theater Guild-American Theater Society season at the National will receive tickets in due course.

Mr. Pete Dailey, pounding a prolific portable in the interest of Universal Pictures, is sure Washingtonians will be interested in the blossoming career of Miss Helen Pender, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Pender of this city, a graduate of McKinley High and Stuyvesant College and for two years one of the famous Powers models in New York. Miss Pender, it seems, was one of six girls chosen from among 500 in international competition for the roles of harem beauties in Walter Wanger's forthcoming Technicolor production of "Arabian Nights." Not surprising since she was "Miss Maryland of 1941," also "Miss American Legion" last year and formerly modeled for James Montgomery Flagg and other magazine cover artists. But the point is that preliminary scenes for "Arabian Nights," starring Marie Montez, Jon Hall and Sabu, went before the cameras last week and Mr. Dailey reports of Miss Pender, "Her beauty and photogenic qualities are outstanding, according to Producer Wanger, who predicts a bright future for her on the screen." Which may, or may not, be Hometown Form Letter No. 1,913,013!

Hitting the Jackpot

The Dwight Deere Wiman-Richard Rodgers-Richard Kollmar production of "By Jupiter," starring Ray Bolger, will play its 200th performance in the Shubert Theater, New York, tonight. According to General Manager Jack Del Bondio, approximately 274,321 people have seen the piece during the 26 weeks since its opening last June 3, for a gross "take" of $716,852. We cite this here in a spirit of congratulation to two old friends—Ray Bolger, in recognition of his deserved hit on Broadway after all the pushing around he got in Hollywood, and that old Washington fiddler, Meyer Davis, who owns a piece of the show.

A self-explanatory note, dated Sunday, bobbed up in these words: "Dear Nelson: Believe it or not, I've turned sassy! After all my years in show business, I have to break a record. I have never missed a show in my life, but yesterday I had to give up after the third show at the Capitol. My voice just left me and it looks as if it would take its time coming back. We went to the Stage Door Canteen Friday night. It was very smoky there and, as you know, I had the makings of a cold. So with that little encouragement it blossomed out beautifully. I sound like a frog horn. They told me I've given too much blood to the Red Cross this year and have weakened my resistance. So now I'll have to add vitamins to my chocolate sodas. Bye now. Best always, SIBYL BOWAN." Miss Bowan's spot on the Capitol stage bill was taken by Keith Clark, magician—which is more or less what Sib is, in her own distinctive way.

Remind me of the item about Ewald Schindler, new director of drama at the King-Smith Playhouse, vice Leon Askin, who's in the Army now. Very interesting, but neither time nor space for it now and here.

My Kingdom for a Horse Note

Everywhere he went yesterday—and he went everywhere—Buck Jones, Monogram's "Western" star who really is one, had a million juvenile autograph hunters hot on his jingle-jangle-jingles. And they could all outrun him!

Premiere of 'The Three Sisters' Distinguishes New Theater Week

"THE THREE SISTERS" brings Katharine Cornell to the National Theater in the premiere of her revival of the play by Anton Chekhov. As actress-manager, the first lady of the theater has surrounded herself with a stellar cast that includes Judith Anderson, Edmund Gwenn, Ruth Gordon, Dennis King, Alexander Knox, McKay Morris, and numerous others. Guthrie McClintic has, of course, directed, and the sets are by Motley of London. Opens Monday.

Double Bill Delights at National

The second performance of the Boston Comic Opera Co. in their repertory of Gilbert and Sullivan operettas at the National Theater, found the group already in rapport with the audience and singing with a warmth and gaiety that on more than one occasion earned them spontaneous outbursts from the patrons.

The double bill, neither of which will be repeated during the week, was composed of that most popular of Gilbert and Sullivan curtain raisers, "Trial by Jury," and the delightful parody on Britain's naval traditions, "H. M. S. Pinafore." In this latter production both the singers and the audience had an equally good time. The lusty male chorus seemed particularly energetic and with the appearance of Florenz Ames, as Sir Joseph Porter, the operetta was assured of its success.

Pat Sees His Dream Come True

Hollywood, Calif., Nov. 24.—Now that RKO has bought "The Iron Major" and signed Pat O'Brien to do out that this is a dream Pat's been trying to make a reality for several months. Story is about Maj. Frank Cavanaugh, who went into the first World War as a private, was wounded, decorated, and came out a major. When he regained his health, he became football coach at Fordham University, where Pat met him, and they became close friends. Cavanaugh finally lost his eyesight, and in 1933 he died leaving six sons who are all in the service now.

PAT O'BRIEN

Pat felt that Major Cavanaugh's life was not only fascinating but inspiring in its example of courage in the face of almost insuperable odds, and he encouraged Mrs. Cavanaugh to sell the idea for a picture.

Aben Kandel will do the screen play, and is leaving for New York immediately for conferences with Mrs. Cavanaugh.

Clifford Odets has surpassed himself. His "Life of George Gershwin," much of it brilliant, weighs 30 pounds and runs 800 pages—when he knows and I know that only 120 pages can be used! That fine writer, Sonya Levien, is now putting it into picture form.

George Raft's been reading "Frenchman's Creek" and has a hankering to do the lead in the picture.

Just wait till you see that "Rigoletto" routine Eleanor Powell and her accompanist, Walter Ruck, have worked out for "I Doed It." Her operatic takeoffs will have you rolling.

There's been a flood of letters pouring in to Producer Samuel Bronston, suggesting various players to do "Jack London," even from Russia, where London was a real favorite.

Prospective gasoline rationing is changing, among other things, the wedding plans of Reggie Gardiner and Nadia Petrova. The ceremony will take place right here in Los Angeles, instead of Santa Barbara, on December 6.

Marguerite Chapman is a happy girl these days. She's the only girl in the cast of "Destroyer," and the part's a real break for her. When Marguerite, who's 5'feet 7", was introduced to Edward G. Robinson (he plays her father in the picture), he looked at her and said, "I must have had an awfully tall wife!"

Hear all is not quite serene between Ida Lupino and Warner Brothers.

Trans-Lux

"THE FIGHTING FRENCH," a new issue of the March of Time, throws a new light on the French problem. The heroic story of the people of bomb-torn Dover is told in a short which bears that title. Ed Murrow, CBS London correspondent, is commentator. Kaltenborn and McCarty analyze the news, the cartoon of the week is entitled "Toll-Bridge Troubles." Opens Friday.

LEONARD LYONS Among My Souvenirs

New York, Nov. 24.

More weeks have passed and the odds moved from our old apartment still lie untouched, until we decide which shall be kept and which thrown away. From the top shelves of the closets and the folds of forgotten envelopes, they've emerged to pose a household problem. Here they are, straight from the pile.

There's a letter from the 62d St. Branch of the Y. M. C. A. rejecting my application for membership seven and a half years ago. I remember that my sponsors were Fred Allen and Ted Husing. I suppose I just wasn't acceptable. I now have the unusual experience of having been turned away by Russia, the Y. M. C. A., the United States Navy, and the Shubert Theaters. . . . There's a copy of my fingerprints, which J. Edgar Hoover took after I inadvertently had left thumb-prints on his smooth, old desk. . . . And there are 12 poems which the late August Heckscher sent me for publication. The philanthropist wrote them after he was 82.

There's a fading tin-type we took before the shrine of Our Lady of Guadalupe, in Mexico, where Heywood Brown once had found the faith. . . . A set of celluloid ears, eye-glasses, teeth, etc., all part of a theatrical kit which Lillian Gish gave me, because she thought he'd like to act. . . . A Jerome Weidman fiction story from the Sat. Eve. Post—a story of a going-away party given to a sportswriter entering the Army. The big villain in that story is the N. Y. columnist who was host at that party. Weidman wrote the story after I had invited him to the going-away party I gave for sportswriter Jimmy Cannon, now a sergeant.

There's a pamphlet containing the address given by the late Justice Cardozo at the First Annual Commencement of the St. John's College School of Law. "Our Lady of the Common Law has indeed no lack of woovers," it begins. I kept that pamphlet because it was the only free item I ever received at law school. . . . There's a torn label marked "Hotel Excelsior, Rome." I ripped it from the bag my wife had packed for me, because it excited suspicious stars when I took it to Washington. . . . A clipping from The Congressional Record in which, to my chagrin, I discovered that my column was quoted by the isolationist Senator Reynolds.

There are four letters from Erskine Caldwell. The first was signed with his full name. The second was signed "Caldwell," the third "Erskine"; the fourth, "Skinny." . . . A news-photo of the courtroom scene in Fleming, at the beginning of the trial of Richard Bruno Hauptmann. One of those recognizable in that photo is my wife—who had phoned her boss earlier that day that she was too ill to report for work. . . . A pin and a blue ribbon presented to each passenger, commemorating the 56th transatlantic crossing made by the Normandie. . . . A letter the then Ambassador Joe Kennedy gave us to Ambassador Phillips at Rome, in case we got into trouble.

There's a name and address Ernest Hemingway gave me before he left for the Chinese front. "If anything happens to me, go see that guy," Hemingway told me. "He knows a lot about me." That man was Hemingway's trainer. . . . Two accountancy books I used in the evening courses at C. C. N. Y. I thought our professor was a cold, awesome figure—until, two months after the course began, he came to the law office where I was employed, and I watched him shrivel before his young, pretty wife, who was a stenographer there. . . . A bill for some trinkets we bought in Copenhagen. We had spent eight hours in a round-trip flight to spend an afternoon of sight-seeing in that city.

There are four unprintable poems written by Gene Fowler. . . . A telegram from Moss Hart, berating me for publishing four lines of the lyrics from "I'd Rather Be Right" and complaining that I thereby had spoiled the surprise for N. Y. The next week, when the George M. Cohan musical had its tryout performance in Boston, the N. Y. Times published the complete lyrics, on its front page. Hart then sent me another wire, "All is forgiven." . . . A miniature loving cup Russell Birdwell once sent me, on which was a Latin inscription I'm afraid to quote here, because I'm not sure it's clean. . . . An envelope with corn from Henry Wallace's farm. We planted some on our terrace-boxes, but nothing came up.

There's the bill for the kindergarten my elder son once attended. I put it with the bills for my own three years' tuition at law school. That short kindergarten term cost more than my entire law-school tuition. "It's worth more, too," my wife insisted, when I protested. "Look how smart George is—and look what happened to your law career." . . . My Working Certificate—"workies" we called it—which I obtained when I was 14 so that I could get a job doing errands for Vincent Astor. . . . Application blanks for admission to practice before the U. S. Supreme Court. One of the Justices said he'd sponsor me, except that he wasn't admitted to practice in that court.

In New Role Miss Del Rio Quits Films To Aid Russia

DELORES DEL RIO

By Jean Meegan

New York, Nov. 24.—Dolores Del Rio has pulled up stakes in Hollywood and is headed for Mexico in the interests of the war effort.

"I went home to Mexico on a holiday," the glamorous star tells it, "and I was appalled to find that there was no China Relief, no Russian Relief organized. I determined that there should be."

Stepped in Russian lore and culture ever since she made the picture "Resurrection" from Count Tolstoy's story, 15 years ago, Miss Del Rio took a penetrating look into the situation and engaged the most conservative and elegant club in Mexico City for a swank Russian Relief Ball.

Looked Impossible

"Frankly, the enterprise looked impossible," Miss Del Rio recalls; chiefly because the two countries had been diplomatic strangers since 1930, "but I coaxed everyone important whom I knew to join forces with me and we put it over with a bang. Carlos Chavez, conductor of the Mexican Symphonic Orchestra, and Miguel Cavarrillas, the great painter, were my special assistants."

"Everyone turned out for the party, the bankers, the old Mexican aristocracy, the intellectual, the liberals, they all were there—the ice was broken."

Heartened by this initial philanthropic success, the authentically beautiful Dolores whipped together a radio program, "Mexico at War," to bring the United States up to date on what goes on down there.

Now she has drawn a line through her Hollywood career and is moving to Mexico as national chairman of Russian War Relief in that country.

If she stayed in this country she would be one of a thousand actresses passing out coffee in a canteen—"and that's worthwhile work, too," she says. But Dolores Del Rio can do more than that, and she knows it.

"For this project you need the strength of government, the wealth of society, and the resources of the artists, and I have friends in all three categories," she says.

She is not abandoning the movies completely, however. She is going to make pictures in Spanish for the South American trade.

"They haven't got much money down there for movie productions and the studios are bad but they make up for those deficiencies with imagination, talent, and very fine actors—particularly character actors."

By December 15, Miss Del Rio will be firmly installed in her mother's home in Mexico City. Her first duty will be to see that one million vaccines are safely dispatched to New York, thence to be relayed to Russia. "These vaccines would cost $250,000 in the United States and we are able to get them in Mexico for $20,000," the actress proudly relates.

"I am enjoying myself in this new role very much," she continued, "because everyone laughed at me and said I was miscast. I was never a clown before in my life. When war was declared I gave a couple of parties to raise money for refugees and subsequently I helped in the Hollywood canteen but this I love."

Slanguage, Creation of Fighting Forces, Aids Communication Between British, Yanks

By James Chambers

United Press Staff Correspondent
London, Nov. 24.—The fierer was stouping because he was browned off and would rather take a ride in a blood wagon than get a piece of cake.

That sentence sounds haywire, and to the civilian it is, but to British and American fliers it's every day "slanguage." Any R. A. F. or American Air Force aviator could tell you in a minute that it means:

The flier was cruising around because he was bored and would rather get hurt and ride in an ambulance than have an easy job. One of the favorite R. A. F. expressions which American airmen have adopted is: The station master took a dim view and tore him off for shooting a line.

That means that the commanding officer had a poor opinion of the flier and rebuked him for exaggerating. Slanguage is the picturesque talk which starts, no one knows how, and spreads until all the men of a certain branch of the service are using it. The Air Force, the Navy and the Army each has its slanguage.

The latest expression used by British and American airmen is "Abbeville Kids," referring to Germany's new Focke-Wulf 190 fighter planes. No one knows how it started but it is common now and even has been used in an official United States Army Air Force communication.

American pilots have contributed their share to the airmen's slanguage. The R. A. F., for instance, has adopted "bellydip" for a crash landing.

The Americans also brought over the term "brown job" to denote an Army task and a "blue job" for a Navy chore.

The slanguage of the British services contains many bewildering expressions. Who except a soldier would know that "got rocket" meant he had been admonished for misconduct or that "going around in the frost" meant you were worrying about something.

No one in the Army or Air Force ever takes his knife, fork and spoon to a meal; it is always his iron.

A "Roman candle landing" is a bad one and an "umbrella man" is a parachutist. These are R. A. F. expressions which developed during the days when the British fliers were smashing the heavy German raids on Britain two years ago.

The conservative British navy is a breeding place for much slanguage and any sailor can tell you that a pair of "crabs" means a new pair of shoes.

A "lizzy snatcher" is the navy paymaster and "Jimmy the one" is a lieutenant.

When a sailor sleeps he takes a "stretch of the land" and the ship's corporal is a "crusher."

One application—think of it—brings great glory and relief from the intense itch and sting of eczema. Poslam is a marvelous, CONCENTRATED ointment known over 35 years for its fast, positive action. Money back if not satisfied. 50¢ at drugstores.

misconduct or that "going around in the frost" meant you were worrying about something.

No one in the Army or Air Force ever takes his knife, fork and spoon to a meal; it is always his iron.

A "Roman candle landing" is a bad one and an "umbrella man" is a parachutist. These are R. A. F. expressions which developed during the days when the British fliers were smashing the heavy German raids on Britain two years ago.

The conservative British navy is a breeding place for much slanguage and any sailor can tell you that a pair of "crabs" means a new pair of shoes.

A "lizzy snatcher" is the navy paymaster and "Jimmy the one" is a lieutenant.

When a sailor sleeps he takes a "stretch of the land" and the ship's corporal is a "crusher."

As the latest expression used by British and American airmen is "Abbeville Kids," referring to Germany's new Focke-Wulf 190 fighter planes. No one knows how it started but it is common now and even has been used in an official United States Army Air Force communication.

American pilots have contributed their share to the airmen's slanguage. The R. A. F., for instance, has adopted "bellydip" for a crash landing.

The Americans also brought over the term "brown job" to denote an Army task and a "blue job" for a Navy chore.

The slanguage of the British services contains many bewildering expressions. Who except a soldier would know that "got rocket" meant he had been admonished for misconduct or that "going around in the frost" meant you were worrying about something.

'Booster' Girls Build Bombs To Smash Axis

By Corinne Hardisty
United Press Staff Correspondent

Ravenna, Ohio, Nov. 24.—The "fuse and booster" girls at the country's largest arsenal are helping to win the war through the natural fondness of women for little things.

The 2500 women at the Ravenna Arsenal, a huge shell and bomb loading plant which stretches over 2200 acres of low rolling Ohio farm land, are super-expert at handling the infinitesimal parts and the minute operations involved in making fuses and boosters. Col. G. K. Franklin, the commanding officer, said today.

The fuse sets off the booster charge that makes a shell explode after it reaches the target, he explained.

"I guess it just comes natural to a woman to do little things well," said Mrs. Lorraine Cronin, 26, a little thing herself. She is the mother of three but came to work at the arsenal last April, the first paying job she ever held.

Her flying fingers never paused and never once dropped one of the parts, not much bigger than a pinhead, which she deftly was dropping into place in a fuse before handing it on to her neighbor who put in another tiny piece of metal with the same delicate precision.

Like all her sisters on the fuse and booster line—housed in shiny new brick buildings spaced at strategically safe distances—Mrs. Cronin wore the regulation tan blouse and slacks uniform, white cotton cap and safety-soled shoes. "Women are quick and accurate in these fine operations," Colonel Franklin said as he walked up and down the long lines of working women, after safety pads had been clapped on the reporter's shoe heels.

"More than that, they are the soul of caution. Safety is the main idea here."

"Our boys on the firing lines all over the world won't have a chance to bring these shells back and exchange them for new ones if they don't work," said Mrs. Myrtle St. Claire, 34, who was testing the fuses.

Savings League For Women Set Up in District

The Women's War Savings League of Washington has been established with the admission of Mrs. Henry Wallace, wife of the Vice President, as the first member, it was announced yesterday.

Object of the organization is to enroll every woman in the District in the Government's war savings program through membership in the league. Headquarters have been established at 439 Washington Building.

Any woman is eligible for membership if she is participating in the war savings program, through payroll savings or the purchase of bonds, either by herself or with her husband as coowner.

Ringside Table

With Mary Harris

A HAPPY THANKSGIVING TO YOU ALL! Thanksgiving dinner in wartime Washington will imply "eating out" to loads of people. But you'll find all the cheer of home dinners in numberless spots—plus the knowledge that no hostess has worked herself into a dither preparing the goodies. . . . Thus at Olmsted's the Early American setting will cheer your heart and you'll find the juicy roast turkey and fad's as fine as any your mummy ever prepared. . . . The Burlington Rose Room is ideal for a family dinner. Soft music and many delightful home cooked delicacies including the crispest of corn sticks. . . . For a modern thrill with your Thanksgiving try the Terrace Room of the Washington Airport. The monster fighting and commercial planes will be arriving and departing just a few feet from your table and in full view. . . . If you have out-of-town guests they'll feel you've treated them to the last word in Capital elegance if you take them to dinner in the Shoreham Blue Room. . . . The Roger Smith Hotel (its cuisine is highly esteemed by gourmets) is featuring roast duckling as well as turkey on its Thanksgiving dinner. . . . Which reminds that if we were eating Thanksgiving dinner at the United Nations restaurant in Alban Towers, we'd surely choose the roast duck (prepared exquisitely by Owner Lucia Stein). . . . After all, turkey is a "must" at Thanksgiving. A Chinese Thanksgiving dinner at Ruby Foo's would be something wonderful, we're certain.

troika's owner, Helen Hamilton, has gleefully cooked up a special Thanksgiving diversion for her clients. Estelle and Leroy, pet dancers of New York society, will open at the same time the Troika Thanksgiving dinner is served. And Sheila Barrett will remain for another week.

MELODY WITH ZING. "I Just Saw You Again," shimmering waltz composed by Artist Lynn Hayes of Cafe Caprice was introduced there last night by the Miles Hallett Band. . . . Dick Gardner's Mayflower Lounge orchestra is offering a version of "Right in the Foe's Face" that's full of TNT and clowning. . . . Maestro Alan Holmes of the Metronome Room has just evolved an arrangement of "I Came Here to Talk for Joe" that makes it practically an opus. . . . Organist Leonard Friendly of the Neptune Room is putting on what he calls an "American Melody Tour." It starts with the songs of Maine, winds up with those of California. . . . Hi-Hat's Jack Neal is playing groups of songs of the United Nations, the numbers ranging from Scotch ballads to Australian music hall songs. . . . Pete Macias' own mixture of

Red Successes In Offensive Delight Roosevelt

President Roosevelt said yesterday that he had got an intimation of the current Russian offensive several days ago and was delighted that it was going along so well.

In this comment at his press conference he emphasized that the press could say he was delighted over its progress. He pronounced the de-light in the Teddy Roosevelt manner.

At the same time Soviet Foreign Minister V. M. Molotov, in a message received by Secretary of State Hull yesterday, hailed the Anglo-American invasion of French North Africa as "presaging a new destructive blow to the Italian and German usurpers."

Molotov's message, after acknowledging Hull's greetings on the recent twenty-fifth anniversary of the founding of the Soviet state, said:

"The success of the Allied arms in Africa, presaging a new destructive blow to the Italian and German usurpers, strengthens still more the assurance that military alliance of our countries and all liberty-loving peoples will bring about full triumph over the common enemy, Hitlerian tyranny."

tain. . . . And a Russian Thanksgiving feast at Balalaika would make you feel both international and highly satisfied. . . . Another exotic but American Thanksgiving idea would be dinner at the Old New Orleans where the cookery is as delicate and unusual as any you'll find in New Orleans' famed restaurants. . . . No matter how finicky your guests may be, they'll be pleased as Punch over a holiday dinner at the Raleigh's Pall Mall Room. Appointments, cuisine and service are the last word. . . . Ditto for the very elegant DuPont Room where you may nibble on endless delicious courses amid the soothing tinkling of Adrian Rollini music. . . . For jollity and nice, hearty food, you will find it hard to top Burt's Trans-Lux. It's a favorite dining spot with Donald Nelson. . . . The Broadmoor dining room has the serene atmosphere of a finely appointed home. And Larry Hendrick will play all of your favorite holiday and old time tunes. . . . If you've hoarded up a gallon of gas, it would be a lovely idea to drive down to River Bend for Thanksgiving dinner. Toast your shins by the open fire while dinner's coming up.

"The Donkey's Serenade." So says Maestro Milton Davis of the Rainbow Room. Life is full of these let-downs.

EYE AND EAR APPEAL. While Nat Brandywine makes beautiful music on the Del Rio bandstand, the dark and extremely soignée Mrs. Brandywine attracts the eyes of all ringdancers. . . . When El Patio's Kathleen Quinn makes big eyes and sings "I Wonder when My Baby's Coming Home," she's the perfect example of eye and ear appeal. . . . Treasure Island's new acquisitions, Arlene Chandler and Harriet Page, possess the dual attractions of beauty and A-1 musical talents. . . . Lotus' Lyda Allen, a perfect example of the willowy type, is singing "I'm Getting Sentimental Over You" with much finesse. . . . Sally Goodwin, singing emcee of the Casino Royal, is rolling up popularity a la snowball. . . . Irma Rodriguez, singer with Herbert Curbeles band at La Conga, is a little Latin firecracker.

YOU FEELIN' LOW? Then, run, drive or walk to Paul Young's Owen and Parker, funny as a carload of crutches, are opening there tonight. If after listening to their goings-on for 30 minutes, you don't laugh yourself into a state of complete joviality—you're hopeless.

S'long. We're off to hear the new Chuck Foster band in the Victory Room. And then on to Jimmy Lake's new Gay Nineties. Wonder if we'll ever get back.

"The Donkey's Serenade." So says Maestro Milton Davis of the Rainbow Room. Life is full of these let-downs.

EYE AND EAR APPEAL. While Nat Brandywine makes beautiful music on the Del Rio bandstand, the dark and extremely soignée Mrs. Brandywine attracts the eyes of all ringdancers. . . . When El Patio's Kathleen Quinn makes big eyes and sings "I Wonder when My Baby's Coming Home," she's the perfect example of eye and ear appeal. . . . Treasure Island's new acquisitions, Arlene Chandler and Harriet Page, possess the dual attractions of beauty and A-1 musical talents. . . . Lotus' Lyda Allen, a perfect example of the willowy type, is singing "I'm Getting Sentimental Over You" with much finesse. . . . Sally Goodwin, singing emcee of the Casino Royal, is rolling up popularity a la snowball. . . . Irma Rodriguez, singer with Herbert Curbeles band at La Conga, is a little Latin firecracker.

YOU FEELIN' LOW? Then, run, drive or walk to Paul Young's Owen and Parker, funny as a carload of crutches, are opening there tonight. If after listening to their goings-on for 30 minutes, you don't laugh yourself into a state of complete joviality—you're hopeless.

Army Employee Fined for Defying Bethesda Blackout

Leslie Daly, of 4402 East-West Highway, Bethesda, Md., a civilian employee of the United States Army, was found guilty of violating the Montgomery County (Md.) blackout ordinance yesterday in what Rockville Circuit Court attaches said was the first jury conviction of its kind in Maryland.

Daly was fined $10 and court costs by Judge Charles W. Woodward.

According to testimony, the violation occurred during a dusk-to-dawn blackout last July 15. Air Raid Warden Hood L. Marshall testified that shortly after the blackout started, he noticed lights in Daly's house and instructed the occupants to turn them off. His testimony was corroborated by another warden Joseph E. Wells, but later Warden Joseph E. Wells, according to testimony, noticed lights on in the same house.

Contract Bridge

By Florence Osborne

Sims was the contract champion who stressed the importance of bidding so that the lead would be favorable to declarer and placing the declaration in the hand where the adverse lead would do the most good.

The great P. Hal preferred to be declarer in the days when he was barnstorming tournaments, and it may well be that he cleverly unearthed this theory to support his own pleasure for P. Hal's hands always seemed to be the kind that needed leading up to. But if a keen desire to play the dummy was in duplicate, brings out the point clearly that there are hands which will make from one to two more tricks played from one side of the table rather than the other, even though partner's trump suit is just as good.

South can make six hearts on today's hand, though North can make only five spades, all because of the location of the king of clubs. If North has the contract in spades, a club lead from East will kill the king and reward the defenders with two tricks. The worst the adversaries can do against South at six hearts is to cash the ace of clubs. The king of clubs standing in declarer's hand is simply a guard against losing two tricks. Once he receives a raise in hearts from his partner he should try to buy the contract because of the obvious advantage of having a club lead come up to rather than through his hand.

In the duplicate game in which the hand was played a small one of only five tables two teams stopped at four spades, one making five because of a club opening the other making seven when East chose a diamond; one pair played the hand at three no trump, making seven, and two teams bid six hearts, one making six, the other seven.

While an ace is not rated very high on the list of leads against small slams in this case West's best play is the ace especially at duplicate, where it is as important to hold a contract to a minimum as it is to set it. It appears fairly certain that South will get discards on North's spade suit if he does not open it.

Against the lead of the ace of clubs, declarer wins the second lead of the suit with the king, draws trumps and discards one diamond on one of dummy's spades.

Experts Study Brighton Dam Silt Problem

Means of curbing silt accumulation at the Brighton, Md., dam and reservoir will be sought today through a survey to be conducted by Maryland State and Federal soil conservation officials and officials of the Washington Suburban Sanitary Commission.

The Brighton Dam, which is now nearing completion on the Patuxent River in the upper end of Montgomery County, probably will be in operation by early spring, according to Harry Hall, chief engineer of the Washington Suburban Sanitary Commission.

When completed, the project will impound water to supply the thickly populated sections of both Montgomery and Prince Georges Counties and to augment the Washington water supply in the event of a shortage.

Although measures were taken in the construction of the dam to relieve silting, further steps are deemed advisable to keep the accumulation to a minimum and to prevent the loss of valuable topsoil from farms in the Patuxent watershed.

Officials who will participate in the survey include Edward M. Davis, Maryland State soil conservationist; Joseph F. Taylor, State forester; R. B. Corbett, director of the Maryland Experiment Station, and Dr. T. B. Symons, director of the University of Maryland extension service, all of whom compose the Maryland State Soil Conservation Commission, and Carl Brown, siltation engineer of the United States Conservation Service; M. L. Nichols, chief research engineer of the service; O. W. Anderson, Montgomery County agent; A. L. Patrick, regional soil conservationist; John Cotton, conservationist of the extension service; Harry Hall and Harry B. Shaw, chief and deputy chief engineers of the Washington Suburban Sanitary Commission, respectively, and Perry Boswell and J. Donald Clagett, chairman and member of the sanitary commission, respectively.
